Rebels besiege Arafat's forces

EIRUT (AP). - Syrian-backed LO mutineers launched a tank-led Hensive in northern Lebanon esterday in an apparent bid to oust LO chairman Yasser Arafat from is last stronghold in the Middle

Arafat vowed his 8,000 eleaguered fighters, with their acks to the sea, would "fight to the atter end to defend our people." le was referring to those in the two alestinian refugee camps of Bad-tawi and Nahr al-Bared on the outkirts of Lebanon's northern port ity of Tripoli.

Arafat charged in a broadcast over his "Voice of Palestine" radio tation that Syrian and Libvan 100ps were supporting dissident PLO guerrillas of Col. Saeed Musa, known as Abu Musa, in the attack. Fighting was reported in the highlands and highway intersections fround t both camps.

A huge column of thick black smoke rose above Tripoli from an oil elinery on the edge of the Baddawi camp set ablaze in the fighting. state-run Beirut Radio said firemen who tried to control the blaze fled after being fired on by unidentified

Police in Tripoli, 80 kilometres north of Beirut, said at least 34 people were killed and 119 wounded in the fighting, which broke out at dawn and raged unabated through the day and into the night.

While rebel spokesmen in Damascus denied any active Syrian involvement, Tripoli-based reporters said Syrian air force jets roared across the border on three supersonic mock attacks on Arafat's command headquarters in Baddawi. The planes did not strafe or bomb any target.

Arafat had charged that his opponents moved in reinforcements of T-54 and T-62 tanks and various types of artillery as well as men into the hills overlooking the Baddawi and Nahr al-Bared camps from neighbouring Syria in the last two

As the fighting flared on Baddawi's outskirts, Arafat convened his top military aides in an emergency session and fired off telegrams to Arab heads of State appealing for prompt intervention to "stop the attack and avert a new massacre," radio reports said.

Firemen battle Haifa blaze

By DAVID RUDGE Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — A pall of smoke hung over Mt. Carmel and Haifa yesterday as a huge blaze swept through 4,000 dunams of trees and scrubland on the western slopes between Kibbutz Beit Oren and the Danya quarter of Haifa.

It was one of many fires in the country — including one near the Latrun monastery near Sh'ar Hagai and several in Galilee - caused or encouraged by the unseasonably hot and dry weather.

Scores of firemen, army reservists and members of the Nature Reserve Authority's Green Patrol fought the Haifa fire while eight crop-spraying planes - each loaded with a ton of water - flew non-stop sorties. A police spokeswoman said the fire started when sparks from an incinerator at the chicken-shed at Kibbutz Beit Oren set alight bundles of straw, and then nearby trees.

The blaze broke out at 9 a.m. and by late last night it was still not under control. Haifa Fire Chief Moshe Vardi told The Jerusalem Post that firemen would be at the scene all

'Reluctant pragmatism' in W. Bank

By DAVID RICHARDSON Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Coordinator of Activities in the Administered Territories, Tat-Aluf (Res.) Binyamin Ben-Eliezer, said yesterday that in his four months in office he has detected what he called "the beginnings of a process of reluctant pragmatism" in the attitude of West Bank and Gaza Palestinians to eventual coexistence with Israel.

"This was not the case when I was the military commander of Judea and Samaria (between 1978 and 1981)" said Ben-Eliezer, better known by his childhood name -Fuad.

Speaking to the editorial staff of The Jerusalem Post, Ben-Eliezer said that "the early cracks" he observed in the Palestinian attitude was the result of what happened to the PLO during last year's war in Lebanon and the deep organizational and ideological schism the organization is now undergoing. These changes are also occurring in the Arab world, where the states of the area were beginn-

"I am trying to cope with this generation and in the current vacuum in the area I hope that I can introduce those motifs that will attract them," he said. "I do not believe that I can turn them into pro-Zionists, but I do want to give them some hope that with a saner and more realistic approach we can develop a new direction (in relations)".

Asked what there was to talk about, Ben-Eliezer stressed that in his numerous recent contacts with local Palestinians, especially representatives of the younger generation, he emphasized solving local and immediate problems. Examples he gave were requests to open more banks and to form an investment company. "There is no point in talking about the macropolitical issues since there is no solution within reach," he said.

He had therefore done all he could to encourage young Palestinians to take over the Arab municipalities where Israelis are now running local government fol-

Orgad outlines his plan to Jerusalem Post 'Controlled austerity' is price of recovery

By AVI TEMKIN and HANAN SHER Jerusalem Post Reporters

Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad yesterday predicted a dramatic improvement in Israel's balance of payments, as a result of his "exportoriented austerity policy.' "In the course of 1984," the new minister told The Post, "exports should grow by 12 per cent and imports drop by 2 per cent. That will mean an improvement of $800 million in the balance of navments in each of the next two years."

The road towards restoring shattered public confidence in the financial structure was a "step-bystep" process, Cohen-Orgad said.

He wanted Israelis to understand that moves taken during the last two weeks were not random measures. but part of an over-all programme for rebuilding the economy.

"We spent the first week dealing with the bank share crisis, and the second on the budget cut," he said. Next on the agenda is the major task of putting the economy on the path of export-led growth.

The finance minister, who took office two weeks ago, was pleased that the turmoil in the capital market had resolved itself with relative smoothness," considering the $3.5 billion contraction in financial assets that had taken place during that brief period.

Cohen-Orgad envisioned a cut in the Israeli public's standard of living, back to 1982 levels. This would imply a 30 per cent drop in the nurchase of durable goods, with a decline of 1 to 2 per cent in current consumption.

"Together, that would mean a 7 per cent decrease," he said. He stressed that fiscal and monetary policy would be geared towards cutting public and private consumption, through tight credit and high interest rates. The greatest burden, he said. would fall on the better-off sectors of the population, affecting 40 to 50

Pentagon still cool to aid for Lavi jet

Weinberger: Jordan unit no threat to Israel

Jerusalem Post Correspondent WASHINGTON. - Despite the U.S. approval last April of licences for the transfer of technology, Secretary of Defence Caspar Weinberger has again expressed strong opposition to Israel's development of the new generation Lavi jet fighter.

Meeting at the Pentagon on Wednesday with a Young Israel delegation, the defence chief made it clear he would continue to reject Israeli requests that some of the annual U.S. Foreign Military Sales (FMS) credits to Israel be authorized for use in the Lavi programme.

He said the U.S. Air Force had concluded that the Lavi would not enhance Israel's military capability. He said the plane was not as good as the U.S.-made F-15. The Lavi, he charged, was primarily designed for it might enhance Israel's economy. But the defence chief insisted that FMS credits - of which Israel is slated to receive $1.7 billion this year - are designed solely to improve a foreign country's military canability.

"We should not be using military funds for this purpose," Weinberger

Curiously, however, he spoke just as the House appropriations committee voted overwhelmingly to allow Israel to use $300 million in FMS credits for Lavi research and development in the U.S. and another $250m. for Lavi expenditures in Israel. But that politically symbolic action, approved by a vote of 40-to-5, was later derailed at least temporarily - when the panel voted to remove any amendments to the pending foreign aid continuing resolution.

Israeli officials have accused Weinberger and the Pentagon of still seeking to block the Lavi despite the administration's decision last April to authorize the technology transfers. But at that time, they conceded, the administration did make clear that approval of the licences did not necessarily foreshadow approval for the use of FMS credits. The U.S. has permitted Israel to use FMS credits in Israel only once before - in connection with the development of the Merkava battle tank. Normally, all FMS credits must be spent in America.

Weinberger's latest comments confirmed that he remains sceptical of the entire operation, which some U.S. aircraft firms have also opposed. They have expressed concern that the Lavi might eventually compete with the U.S. for export

Call for tightening child-abuse laws

By CHARLES HOFFMAN .

Jerusalem Post Reporter The legal weapons to fight child abuse are limited and ineffective, Deputy Attorney-General Yehudit Karp said this week.

Kurp spoke at a Beit Hanassi symposium organized by the President's Commission on Child Welfare devoted to "Children and Youth in a Violent Society," under the auspices of the president's wife, Aura Herzog Karp said the law requiring doctors, nurses, teachers, social workers and law enforcement officials to report suspected instances of child abuse to police is seldom implemented. Doctors, for example, are reluctant to report possible cases because of conflicts with medical ethics.

There is nothing in Israel, she said, comparable to the English law specifically prohibiting child abuse. The closest thing here is the law obligating parents to care for their children's health, and even this passed only this year. Now parents who endanger the health of their children may be sentenced to up to three years in prison.

Another recent amendment allows parents to testify against each other and children against their parents in cases of child abuse. Previously, this was not permitted.

In cases where charges are pressed against parents, she said that it is usually difficult for the police to obtain clear-cut evidence. Convictions too may create as many problems as they solve, because they make the children or one parent responsible for sending the other parent to jail. This may worsen the future relations in the

Looking next at the minor as perpetrator rather than victim of crime, Karo said that there is still a a great need for a separate detention facility for juveniles, who are now locked up with adult criminals and often suffer sexual abuse. The lot of Arab juveniles is even worse, she said.

She said it would not surprise her if defence lawyers for juveniles would soon be pleading "diminished capacity" for their clients due to the influence of violence in the media. This line of defence has already been atttempted in the U.S.

Other speakers were Likud MK Ehud Olmert, Nitzav-Mishne Shlomo Gal of national police headquarters, Mapam MK Yair Tzaban, Haifa Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Shear-Yeshuv Cohen, author Sammy Michael and the coach of the Netanya Maccabi soccer team. Mordechai Speigler.

IDF officer held for stealing arms

By MICHAL YUDELMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - An army reserve officer, his girlfriend and four other persons were arrested yesterday on suspicion of stealing military equipment, including arms, and possessing a marijuana plant.

At 1:30 a.m. yesterday, a car belonging to the 26-year-old lieutenant was stopped at a police barrier at the Herzliya junction. The man and his girlfriend were sitting in front, and four of their friends in the back seat. A search of the car revealed detonators, fuses, two hand grenades, thousands of bullets, military uniforms, flak jackets, fireproof overalls, batteries and military flashlights. Under the front passenger seat the police found a bug containing parts of a marijuana

A Herzliya police team searched the officer's Tel Aviv apartment and found military parachutes, a Kalatchnikov rifle, military mattresses and several other items taken from military bases. A marijuana plant was growing in a pot in the apartment, police said. The man told police that he had taken the equipment during his reserve service and did not realize how much of it had accumulated, police said.

When asked by his interrogators why he stole the articles, and especially the ammunition, he reportedly replied, "I just wanted to have them in stock.'

(Continued from Page One) lowing the dismissal of the original elected councils last year. "That is an abnormal and unhealthy situation, but I am in no rush and will not force them."

Replying to a question about the future of the village leagues, in view of his oft-expressed scepticism about them prior to his appointment. Ben-Eliezer said that the leagues had to be seen in proportion and allowed to grow naturally. "They do not represent the whole area but a part of it - and even then I have my reservations. They don't represent thousands."

He also flatly ruled out any political activity by the leagues, claiming that the area "was not ripe" for this and noting that it was

Ben-Eliezer said he also saw a change in attitude among the Israeli settlers in the area. There is now a. majority who favour dialogue with the local Arabs. Even in Kiryat Arba, the majority favour dialogue, he said, but the town "was a hothouse for all sorts of groups and some of their activities were harmsolved attacks on Arabs, such as last August's shooting at the Hebron Islamic University and the 1980 carbomb attacks on three West Bank mayors, Ben-Eliezer said: "I am sorry to say that some of the activity appears to be the responsibility of Jewish militant groups from outside the area."

The recommendations of the "Karp Report," which examined the role of the police and the security service in dealing with Jewish crime against Arabs in the territories, would be implemented, he said, but "within the objective constraints that exist."

Ben-Eliezer forcefully defended his order on Wednesday to close the Catholic University of Bethlehem for 60 days. He said that his relations with what used to be the College de Freres went back a long time and he had seen the "Islamization" of the university. He alleged that the Christian community had complained as various PLO fronts took over the student council and even threatened the university administration.

The decision to close the university had been taken after lengthy deliberations and in the awareness that it coincided with a UN General Assembly debate, an impending UNESCO conference and would mean that the Catholic university would be closed over Christmas. "What prompted me was the threat the students posed to ordinary people in Bethlehem," he said, adding that he wanted to administer "shock treatment."

"At Birzeit they observed a voluntary two-day strike but no more than that, because they know that it is the same Fuad (as served as military commander of the area). I will not allow any violence by any party, nor will I allow any political subversion which could lead to violence," he said.

He termed the decision; to which he was party, to allow political activity by the pro-PLO mayors and the formation of the now-banned National Guidance Committee following the 1978 Camp David accords "a mistake." It had been taken in the hope that there would be some positive reaction to the proposals from the area, but this did 'not occur.

Ben-Eliezer said that he did not expect that a possible recession in Israel would cause any major unemployment in the West Bank or Gaza, because there is already a shortage of labour in the areas. Nor did he anticipate that his budget would be substantially affected. because a substantial part came from taxes collected from the local population. "Only 40 per cent of the potential in income tax is being collected," he said.

Referring to a recent visit by an American State Department delegation which proposed development projects on the West Bank to foster moderate political elements, Ben-Eliezer revealed that Israel had suggested a $1.5 billion programme to resettle the 270,000 Palestinian refugees in Gaza and the West Bank. (The Americans were apparently offering some $15 million.)

"The problem in the West Bank and Gaza is not socio-economic but political. Resettling the refugees is one area in which a substantial socio-economic change could be effected," he said. But whatever was undertaken had to be in consultation with Israel, he said.

More Falashas at Sigd celebration

Jerusalem Post Reporter The aliva of Jews from Ethiopia over the past year was reflected in the larger numbers of participants in their annual Sigd celebration atop Jerusalem's Mt. Zion Vesterday.

Many of those who gathered in a grove on the site appeared to be newcomers who had not yet learned Hebrew. They came to mark the Ethiopian-Jewish holiday which falls at noon of the 27th day of the Hebrew month of Heshvan and has been celebrated for some 2,500 years, since the time of the prophets Ezra and Nehemia: The holiday recalls the giving of the Tora at Sinai and provides the opportunity to repent.

Ben-Porat called on the Ethiopian government to allow free emigration and to permit those Jews who remain to observe their religion unhampered.

The community's rubbi, Yosef Hadana, said he hoped the day would come when all 26,000 Ethiopian Jews in the world would live logether in Israel.

Rabbi David Chelouche, chief rabbi of Netanya, also addressed the Ethiopian Jews on the occasion of gathering that the State of Israel would not be silent until all Ethio- ? pian Jews who want to emigrate are allowed to do so. "Every one of you can tell a tale of tribulations that you endured to get here. This ceremony here is a miracle that we don't fully appreciate."

The president added that, the Falashas are not alone in undergoing the difficulties of absorption which every previous immigrant group had gone through. Minister Mordechai Ben-Porat, who is the cabinet member dealing with Ethiopian Jewry, said that the only factor limiting the aliya of all Falashas is Ethiopia itself. He expressed Israel's thanks to the Ethiopian government for allowing visits

Warm weather leaves pond fish gasping

Oxygen is produced in sunlight which turns carbon dioxide into oxygen. At this time of the year, the days are very short. But because of the unseasonable warm weather the fish are stimulated to increase their activity and feeding, which means they need more oxygen. Micro-organisms in the ponds also consume more oxygen, for the same reason, adding to the shortage.

By this time of the year, the ponds are normally adjusted to reduced activity and feeding with commensurate less need for oxygen. But the sharav has upset the natural balance.

Levin said that if the sharav ends in a day or two little damage will be caused, but if it continues, "We'll be in

New white blood-cell process developed

By DAVID RUDGE

Jerusalem Post Reporter HAIFA. — A new method of extracting white blood corpuscles from a donor while preserving the effectiveness of the bacteria-killing cells has been pioneered by a senior. doctor at the Histadrut Kupat Holim Carmel hospital here, the sick fund's spokeswoman reported this week.

The cells are drawn directly from the donor's bone marrow, where the white corpuscles are produced, and can be speedily prepared for transfusion into the bloodstream of a patient suffering from severe infec-

Some of the cells immediately combat the destructive bacteria in the patient's blood, while others are transmitted to the bone marrow where they encourage the growth of white corpuscles.

The spokeswoman said the process, the first of its kind, had been devised by Dr. Ester Aghai. director of the Carmel hospital hematological institute and blood bank. It is quicker and less costly than the existing system whereby the white cells are taken from the donor's blood and then separated from the red corpuscles.

Under that method the donor must be connected to complicated machinery for four or five hours while the separation process is completed. During the process many of the white cells are damaged and their effectiveness is diminished, she said.

With the new system the donor, who reported no ill effects, is given a local anaesthetic while the cells are extracted from the bone marrow. The entire process; including preparation of the cells for transfusion, takes an hour. As a result the quality and effectiveness of the white blood corpuscles is much higher.

A report on the new method is to be published in international medical journals.

U.S. troops told to begin pullout as week's fighting ends in Grenada

WASHINGTON (AP). — President Ronald Reagan said yesterday that hostilities had ended in Grenada and that U.S. military commanders are being instructed to begin withdrawing their forces within a few days.

"Our objectives have been achieved, and as soon as logistics permit, American personnel will be leaving," the president said.

According to the President's spokesman, Larry Speakes, there are 5,980 soldiers on the island plus some Air Force personnel. The first troops were dispatched on October

Reagan praised the action of U.S. forces in Grenada, saying that they "not only rescued our citizens" but saved the people of the Caribbean island "from oppression."

"Who knows what evil the liberation of Grenada may have prevented?" he said.

The President had said the day of the U.S. invasion that the troops were dispatched to help approximately 600 American medical students leave the island and restore democratic processes there after a coup in which leftist leader Maurice Bishop was replaced by an even more Marxist group.

Saluting the U.S. troops, the President yesterday said, "The American students called them rescuers. The citizens of Grenada have hailed them as liberators."

The president said the situation on the island is "stable" and that there had been no recent incidents of sniper fire.

Asked about comparisons between the Soviet military move into Afghanistan in December. 1979, and "what we did in Grenada," Reagan said, "Oh, for heaven's sakes.

"It was a successful rescue mission, and the people that have been rescued and the Grenadians that have been liberated are down there delighted with and giving every evidence of appreciation and gratitude to our men down there." And while the U.S. intervention

The president was asked if he was concerned about the 108-9 vote Wednesday night in the UN General Assembly condemning the U.S. action, and replied, "It didn't upset my breakfast at all."

He said that "100 nations in the UN have not agreed with us on just about everything that's come before hem where we're involved."

The General Assembly adopted a resolution calling for withdrawal of foreign troops from Grenada. The vote was 108-9 with 27 abstentions. The negative votes were cast by the U.S., Israel, Antigua-Barbuda, Barbados, Dominica, Jamaica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, and El Salvador. The resolution was sponsored by Nicaragua and Zimbabwe.

Nicaragua took the issue to the Assembly after the U.S. vetoed a similar resolution it sponsored in the Security Council last Friday. Security Council resolutions are binding on the UN membership, but General Assembly resolutions are not, and there is no veto in the As-

U.S. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick walked out of the Assembly as Cuba's Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Viera charged that Reagan lied when he said that U.S. citizens were in danger and that other nations originated the idea for the attack.

In Canberra, Foreign Minister Bill Hayden said yesterday that Australia's UN delegation apparently ignored instructions from Canberra and voted for the resolu-

Hayden said he had told the delegation that Australia, which has criticized the invasion as hard to justify, should abstain on the vote. The government is now seeking to have its vote clarified with a statement pointing out that its representatives had voted in error, he said.

Wounded Cubans return to heroes' welcome

HAVANA (Reuter). - Thousands of people gathered outside Havana's leading hospital and sang the national anthem as Cubans wounded in Grenada came home as national heroes.

The 57 injured, some limping with others on stretchers, and 10 accompanying Cuban doctors were all greeted individually by President Fidel Castro as they left the airliner chartered by the Red Cross to fly them home Wednesday night. Most were heavily bandaged and some looked about 60 years of age, raising doubts about American claims that they belonged to a crack military construction unit on the

They were wounded while fighting the U.S.-led invasion force that encountered stiff resistance among the 780 Cubans on Grenada, mostly helping build an airport.

An estimated 40 were killed and the rest taken prisoner. Cuba has protested bitterly that it had to wait a week before the first of its citizens were allowed to leave.

Official sources said the flight had evacuated virtually all the wounded from Grenada and that attention would now turn to repatriating the dead and around 650 prisoners.

The government reported yesterday that Cuba's ambassador on the island had managed to hold talks with the U.S. authorities but that progress towards the complete evacuation of the Cubans was stalled. More than a week after the invasion started, Cuba still does not know exactly how many of its workers were killed in the invasion,

On Tuesday, the Governor-General of Grenada, Sir Paul Scoon, gave Cuban diplomats 24 hours to leave the island but they refused, saying they would not budge until all the other Cubans were repatriated.

Cuba reported that its embassy had been completely surrounded by U.S. troops and claimed that some diplomats had been harassed.

The regime ruled 12 other new parties out of the poll, although five are now legally constituted. It was the views and forecasts of these that newspapers are barred from publishing.

The five include the Social Democratic party and conservative Right Way party, which both appear to have considerable support countrywide.

Their leaders held press conferences yesterday to state their views on the elections in spite of the military ban.

In Ankara, Social Democratic party (SODEP) leader Cezmi Kartay said his party had been excluded from the elections "without any legal grounds being given."

The sole basis of its exclusion was "the necessities and peculiarities of the regime," he added.

The national security council, which has ruled Turkey since the 1980 coup, gave no reasons for barring the 12 parties. But President Kenan Evren has said he wanted only a few strong parties loyal to the aims of the military takeover to enter the new parliament.

The "curtain of silence" round Albania was hard to penetrate and news of Father Luli's death reached Rome only recently when an Albanian Moslem obtained political asylum, the radio added.

MANILA (AP). - President Ferdinand Marcos called for a meeting today of the Philippines' two highest executive bodies to discuss the presidential succession issue which has brought disagreement within his own government.

A presidential palace announcement yesterday said Marcos set the meeting of his 28-man cabinet and the 10-member executive committee to discuss succession and major economic issues.

Marcos also said he was convening a caucus of the ruling New Society Party as soon as possible "to decide once and for all this issue of the vice presidency which has been sprung upon us by strange sources."

Uncertainty over succession cropped up following the August 21 killing of former Sen. Benigno Aquino, repeatedly denied rumours that Marcos's health is deteriorating, and recent demonstrations calling for Marcos's resignation. Marcos announced Monday that his powers would pass to Prime Minister Cesar Virata if anything should happen to him.

There has been no clear-cut successor to Marcos since the vicepresidency was abolished in 1972. A 1981 constitutional amendment created the executive committee, with the prime minister as chairman, which is collectively empowered to act as government caretaker if Marcos leaves office.

Marcos' foreign minister, Assemblyman Arturo Tolentino, Wednesday described designation of the prime minister as future caretaker as "unconstitutional and extremely dangerous."

PRESIDENT Chaim Herzog today completes one-tenth of his five-year term at Beit Hanassi. Six months is a relatively short time, but it is enough to assess what kind of man he is and what kind of presidency his will be.

"I want my presidency to be 100 per cent." Herzog said privately shortly after taking office as the sixth president of Israel.

He has so far made no substantial errors. What could have been a minefield — the selection of a party leader to try to form a new government after the resignation of Menachem Begin — did not damage the president's reputation. Knesset support for Yitzhak Shamir and the Likud was so large that Herzog was not confronted with the possibility of first asking Shimon Peres - his former colleague in the Labour Party - to form a coalition.

Herzog also managed to sidestep short-lived criticism of the cost of renovating the private residence at Beit Hanassi, which approximated the price of a five-room cottage in Jerusalem. The headlines soon petered out as Herzog's aides showed reporters the rotten and rusty water pipes found behind walls in the residence, arguing that the state had built and maintained Beit Hanassi very poorly.

THE PRESIDENT will leave for the U.S. in 10 days for his first state visit. He will undoubtedly be an able representative at the White House, where he will meet President Ronald Reagan, and at the UN, where he is scheduled to speak and where, exactly eight years ago, as Israel's ambassador to the world body, he dramatically tore up the "Zionism is racism" resolution.

It was the public side of Chaim Herzog - his UN service, his articulate explanations of battle trends on TV during the Yom Kippur War, his books and newspaper articles, his distinguished family connections — that came to mind as one watched his inauguration last May 5 from the Knesset press gal-

But few journalists had any idea about Chaim Herzog, the private

Thus, when I noticed a few sentences that Herzog had written in his own hand on the text of his inaugural address distributed among the press, I decided to send the script for graphological analysis.

The evaluation has proved accurate in the six months that I have covered his activities at Beit Hanassi. According to the analysis, Herzog is very intelligent; has an orderly mind; cares a great deal about appearances (his own and his surroundings) and aesthetics; is a perfectionist; insists that his orders be carried out; enjoys compliments; keeps his distance from strangers and even from members of his family; is not emotional; does not get involved deeply with other peo-ple's problems or feelings; and likes to have plenty of room.

THE FIRST SIX MONTHS

HERZOG knew that succeeding Yitzhak Navon would be a hard act to follow. The fifth president, according to the polls, was the most popular head of state in Israel's history; he forged a new concept of the president as an activist who must visit towns and settlements around the country. He remained apolitical, but did not shy away from discussing controversial matters. And after leaving Beit Hanassi of his own volition, Navon remains a highly popular figure.

Learning from Navon, Herzog realized that the common people needed the presidency as a symbol. He adopted Navon's practice of touring the country - kibbutzim, police installations, moshavim, factories, army bases - in order to show them that someone in an august position cares about them. He also continued Navon's custom of inviting cabinet ministers and other officials to Beit Hanassi for private luncheons a few times a week. Herzog began speaking about vital issues; the need for aliya, the dangers of assimilation threatening the survival of Diaspora Jewry, the threat posed by conflict between the Orthodox and the nonobservant Jewish communities in Israel, the divisions between Arabs and Jews and between Ashkenazim and Sephardim.

But even though both men were protégés of David Ben-Gurion and though only three years separate them (Herzog, at 65, is the elder), they remain extremely different Navon's idea of a good time, even after becoming president, was sitting around in Jerusalem's Mahane Yehuda market eating felafel and even shmooting with the locals about politics, their problems and life in general. Herzog's favourite pastime is sailing — a lonely sport.

The differences in their personalities are also reflected in their respective styles as president. Navon, in his thousands of public receptions and meetings, let them go on for hours. He often invited members of the audience to stand up and talk about themselves or questioned them about matters that interested him. He was very close to the Beit Hanassi staff, learning about the backgrounds and problems of most of them, down to the women who worked in the

Navon rarely spoke from a written text, except when using his classical Arabic or making a very official statement. He was very aware of the role of the press in reaching the population, and occasionally provided reporters he trusted with off-the-record comments on VIPs he had just met. Navon was emotional, even being moved almost to tears when, for example, he saw a nargile like the one used by his late mother. The fifth president was highly sensitive to criticism, and thought out all his moves carefully, lest he be attacked. And he was sometimes bitterly attacked in the media, largely because he was Herzog, on the other hand, has cut the length of his public receptions to half or one-quarter the time that Navon devoted to them. Used to Navon's approach, some of Herzog's audiences have been taken aback by what might be regarded as curtness and coldness.

viewed as a man with a political

AN EXAMPLE was Herzog's recent reception of the United Jewish Appeal's President's Mission. Comprising over 100 impor-tant donors and fundraisers from the U.S.

After refreshments were served,

Herzog and his wife Aura entered. When a UJA leader began to offer a detailed description of Herzog's accomplishments, the president cut him short, explaining rather awkwardly that he wanted to introduce the custom of no presidential introductions. Herzog proceeded to read from a prepared text. This took him some four minutes, whereupon he and his wife left the hall.

The audience reacted with surprise. One American even had the huizpa to confront the president to his face: "I flew 16 hours on a plane to get to Israel, and that is the speech you give?"

The next evening, after aides explained why the audience reacted as it did, Herzog invited members of the Keren Hayesod President's Mission to ask him questions.

AT FIRST I thought that Herzog always spoke from a prepared text for fear that, as a native English speaker, he would make errors in Hebrew. But when he also read his English speeches, I realized that this was his method.

Despite his years of service in the U.S., Herzog is surprisingly uncomfortable with Americans, including American Jews. His discomfort among Europeans is less blatant, but it is more pronounced when he meets with large audiences.

Herzog's reserve is also apparent in his relations with the Beit Hanassi staff, with whom he has minimal contact.

And his relationship with the press involved some problems. Soon after taking office, he said to Galei Zahal that "50 per cent of what the press has reported about [me] is not true." There have indeed been a number of inaccurate and unfair stories written about Herzog, including a Ha'aretz story, plastered across the front page without a hyline, claiming that various party leaders were "shocked" by Herzog's advocacy of the establishment of a national unity government. A story in a local Jerusalem paper, Kol Ha'ir, describing efforts to protect him from the handshakes of the crowd at his Succot reception, was very unfair and even malicious.

THE DIFFERENCE between the two presidents can even be illustrated by the different refreshments offered at receptions: Navon's fare was usually gooey, chocolate-covered petits fours, Moroccan "cigars," and bourekas; Herzog usually offers dry, English-style biscuits and fruit; after a nibble, many guests leave most of the biscuits untouched.

Another example of Herzog's husinesslike approach was his ap neurance at Jerusalem's Biku Holim Hospital just a few days after his inauguration. He went to show solidarity with patients suffering from the long doctors' strike, and staved for 30 minutes. He greeter reporters and posed for photographs, signed the hospita guest book, chatted with doctors said hello to a former government official he noticed in one bed, and Perhaps Herzog looks more like: president - thin, tallish, countly than Navon, who is bespectacled short, roly-poly and balding. Bu Navon seemed to arouse more feel ing. Herzog also has a nervous cough, and the bad habit of covering part of his face with his palm o fingers -annoys photographers and cameramen.

While Navon chafed under the restrictions that prevented him from speaking his mind on political subiects (that was one of the reasons why he chose not to serve a second term), Herzog does not seem to mind the limitations. The Liked government has no complaint about Herzog, who apparently learned how to represent the state, as a whole, during his diplomate

THE HERZOGS' concern for aesthetics has transformed much of Beit Hanassi. The garden, which had in parts been neglected because of lack of proper maintenance employees, now has colourful borders of petunias and thousands of flourishing plants. Mrs. Herzog, international president of the Council for a Beautiful Israel, has a great eve for detail - and even changed the cloth background in the display cases of antique jewelry from beige to brown, to better set off the works of art. Herzog appointed an art advisory committee of experts who suggest what paintings and sculpture to put on show in the presidential residence. More plants have been brought indoors. Artist Ya'acov Agam has lent a dozen of his work - from the acrylic mesuza on the door of the president's office to paintings, wall hangings and mobiles. All are displayed on the first floor outside the president's office. The only apparent miscalculation was Mrs. Herzog's choice of carpet to replace the fraved one that was there before; i is baby-blue acrylic, which shows every footstep and is so light in colour that it is already shabby in high-traffic places.

All these are not merely surface

Each president of Israel brings his own style to the institution. It will be interesting to see during the next four-and-a-half years how! Herzog will change the presidency, and how the presidency will change

ISRAELI OFFICIALS, American Jewish activists and other Middle East specialists in Washington could not help but notice the many similarities between the Israeli drive into Lebanon during the summer of 1982 and the recent U.S. intervention in Grenada.

Both were justified domestically in terms of vital national security. yet both generated considerable condemnation. Both resulted in much greater casualties than originally envisaged by the military planners. And in both cases there were ill-fated aerial strikes against supposedly military targets, destroying hospitals and killing civilians instead. PLO and Cuban forces were accused of deliberately stationing themselves among innocent

Israeli officials kept foreign (but not Israeli) reporters out of Lebanon during the first four days of the invasion. The Americans initially kept all reporters out of Grenada, generating a firestorm of media protest in the United States. Israeli officials discovered warehouses packed with Sovietsupplied weapons — some 10 times many as Israel's intelligence ser vices had predicted. The Americans in Grenada have escorted reporters to similar arms caches, much greater than anticipated.

The Cubans, we have now been told by the Pentagon, were planning to establish a full-scale arms depot in Grenada. From there, the weapons would be exported to anti-American terrorist groups around Central America.

"This warehouse," President Ronald Reagan declared, "contained weapons and ammunition stacked almost to the ceiling, enough to supply thousands of ter-Israel came up with hundreds of captured PLO documents in Lebanon incriminating the Syrians and the Soviets. In Grenada, U.S. troops also have discovered documents reportedly detailing Cuban and Soviet plans to make Grenada their new proxy in the region.

reported receiving warm welcomes from the local residents, grateful for the "liberation." U.S. and Israeli spokesmen complained equally as strongly when journalists used the word "invasion" to describe what had occurred.

The Cubans were the ones who had invaded Grenada," said a White House official, sounding very much like the many Israeli spokesmen who had charged the PLO with "taking over" Lebanon in

And the similarities go on and on. Grenada, we were told, was a friendly island paradise for tourism." Reagan said. "Well, it wasn't. It was a Soviet-Cuban colony being readied as a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy. We got there just in time."

Israeli officials made that same point in justifying Operation Peace for Galilec, Israel, they said, could wait no longer. The Soviet/ Syrian/PLO huild-up in Lebanon was creating an intolerable situation along Israel's northern border. The PLO mini-state had become the major training ground for all sorts of international terrorists. Israel, the argument went, had no choice but to strike quickly — just as the U.S. was supposedly left with no alternative but to use military force in Grenada.

Yet despite all these similarities, there were important differences as well. Certainly, the immediate danger to Israeli citizens living in Kiryat Shmona was considerably greater than any physical threat to Americans living in Key West, Florida — some 2,000 kilometres from Grenada. Thus, an Israeli official commented, if the U.S. was justified in knocking out the Cubansponsored base in Grenada, Israel was much more justified in destroying the PLO infrastructure in Lebanon.

TO THE OBVIOUS embarrassment of the White House, the Pentagon and the State Department, Israel did indeed seem to have a much better case for its assault into Lehanon .- an action which generated a severe rift between Washington and Jerusalem and widespread criticism of Israel in the U.S. media.

Most Americans had never even. heard of Grenada only a few weeks ago. There were highly publicized military sanctions imposed against Israel for allegedly misusing U.S.supplied weaponry in Lebanon. There were threats against Israel for moving all the way up to Beirut. And there were charges that Israel may have violated U.S. law by notusing those arms in legitimate self-

As a result, the Reagan administration held up the sale of 75 additional F-16 fighter planes to Israel, pending a legal determination. (That sale has since been authorized.)

Thus, it was not surprising that with obvious bitterness and only half jokingly, an American Jewish lobbyist on Capitol Hill asked: Were U.S. weapons used in legitimate self-defence on Grenada?

That lobbyist also sought to make nuclear reactor at Osirak should now also be seen by the U.S. as more understandable. That reactor, he pointed out, posed a much greater potential threat to Israel's very security than any Cuban-built runway and weapons warehouse on Grenada_ MUCH LIKE former prime minister Menachem Begin, President Ronald Reagan was warmly praised by his hardline right-wing supporters for his eventual willingness to use crushing force against the enemy.

Both leaders, after taking office, had been severely criticized by some of their once very closest friends for supposedly moving away from their long-time beliefs. Begin. of course, had parted ways with the likes of Shmuel Katz and Geula Cohen, the responsibilities of leadership having forced him to move more toward the centre of Israeli politics. Reagan also had been challenged by conservative Republicans after moving to the White House. in the aftermath of Grenada and to Israel from now on.

the point that Israel's June 1981 the terrorist bombing of U.S. aerial strike against the Iraqi Marine headquarters in Beirms (which resulted in the death of som 240 Marines), many U.S. officials are taking a second look at Israel's: initial thrust into Lebanon last year. They have increasingly come to appreciate Israel's long-time argument that it is dealing with ... in the words of Defence Minister Moshe Arem – a "subhuman" enemy, prepared to kill almost randomly.

> Thus, there are fewer illusions is Washington these days about the Syrian and PLO threat that faced Israel over the years.

> There are other twists and ironio which have been underlined in the U.S. media in recent days. The Reagan administration would not like to see Israel take a more assertive posture in Lebanon as counterweight to the heady Syrists and their allies. This is in market contrast to the U.S. efforts to hold Israel back only one year ago.

> In short, the use of U.S. military muscle in Grenada and the danger facing the marines in Lebanon are forcing a fundamental reassessmen throughout the administration of the entire Israeli war in Lebanon with Israel beginning to smell a lo sweeter in the process. There will be a lot less moralizing and preaching

MANY TALK about the failure of the Aridor-Plessner instant doilarization plan for the economy. So far few have taken notice of the creeping dollarization already with us and bound to work its way through the entire economic system.

It is difficult to remember, in these heetie days, that just a few years ago the then director-general of the Finance Ministry, Prof. Ya'akov Ne'eman considered legislation that would prevent the use of dollars as a vardstick in cerjain transactions, mainly long-term investments and their usage and real estate valuations. A lot of water has gone down the Jordan since then (1980), and today even cuts in the hudgets of the Israeli government are presented to the public in dollars. To Plessner this was a natural outgrowth of an inflationary situation such as we have in Israel, His programme was to legalize and standardize the process in one drastic

step, intended to halt inflation with one quick and painful stroke of his

I do not here intend to explain the idea hehind the late dollarization plan. It is sufficient to say that it was not an altogether crazy idea. All Aridor would have needed was a lot of political acumen in order to carry it out. This had to include a factor that he failed to consider — the support of his colleagues. Paradoxically, had he possessed this support, he could have carried out a policy of economic reform without having resorted to the trick of totally dollarizing the economy.

Unfortunately, Aridor and his plan vanished from the political scene, as if he had been a nonperson with a non-plan. But the presence or the absence of Aridor did not solve the real problem of stability versus hyper-inflation. For that reason, dollarization is still very much with us. Every day more and more transactions are made in dol-

The fact that the treasury has recently prohibited payment in actual dollars or in traveller's cheques does not change the basic situation. because one must hold on to something stable in order to transact even the most trivial business.

Because of this, a thriving black market in dollars is certain to develop.

THE KEY factor here is hyperinflation. Few people would be interested in dollars for internal use otherwise. But, since all the Likud governments so far have resigned themselves to live with the situation, we do need some stable counterpoint, like the economic equivalent of a navigating device.

that the present hyper-inflationary spiral was actually set off by those two seemingly solid Liberals, the late Simha Ehrlich as finance minister and Yehezkel Flomin as his deputy (who was touted as the "expert Liberal economist who knows everything"). Flomin, incidentally, still has the nerve to appear in the media and to preach on how to run the economy,

Inflation is now accelerating at a rate around 200 per cent annually, and people have need of a relatively stable vardstick for daily use. Sooner or later your neighbourhood grocer is going to quote the price of his goods in dollars although you will still pay him in shekels, Modern technology here comes to the rescue, because everyone will need a pocket calculator if he leaves the

I shall not even consider here the time wasted on these transactions or the tension we shall now have due

It is worthwhile to mention here to the daily posting of currency prices. At least it may sell more newspapers since few will want to enter any transaction without & reasonably up to date quotation. The real problem is that under this system every rise in prices, local or foreign, will immediately be a factor in the ballooning inflation. All prices will actually be adjusted daily, and the publication of a monthly cost of living index will be largely for the record.

It is hard to believe that anyone is going to agree to link himself to such an outdated record, and esnecially not labour with its cost-ofliving allowances. No one paid in shekels on a monthly basis will be willing to endure instant dollarlinked prices and slow motion shekel-linked wages, There will either be unprecedented unrest where labour is concerned or else it will be necessary to link wages to some dollar-weighted daily and monthly average.

TWO SLOG ANS in Arabic daubed by the same hand on the walls of phouses in Shuafat, an Arab suburb in northern Jerusalem, give an insight into the current mood of local Palestinians.

"Whoever participates in the municipal elections is an agent," , read one, while a block away another called for "Unity Within

In the face of an acknowledged increase in voter turn-out in last week's municipal elections in Terusalem and the continuing decline in the status of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat within his own Fatah movement, those slogans hetray despair. But it is a despair tempered by a deep-seated conviction that the Palestinian problem will not just disappear and a paradoxical hope that Israel itself will ultimately realize that it cannot digest the Palestinians and will eventually voluntarily give them the independence they demand. ... Interior Ministry and municipal officials were still analysing the returns of last Tuesday's elections when this article was written, but it is clear that what was first presented as a dramatic 50 per cent increase in voter turn-out in real terms is a far more modest indication of East Jerusalemites' willingness to participate in what they all still see as a purely Israeli political exercise.

In the 1978 municipal elections. .300 Arab residents out of a potential voting population of 55,000 went to the polls, giving a percentage turn-out of 15 per cent.

Arab votes were recorded. A superficial comparison of absolute

If the voter turn-out is compared

A VETERAN East Jerusalem newspaper editor said the day after the elections that no one could really deny that there had been freer participation this time than ever before. But he pointed out that the additional votes had come, by and numbers indicates a 48 per cent increase since 1978. Jerusalem's Arab voting population has increased to 67,000, but municipal officials say that some 10,000 of these eligible voters are abroad, while some 2,000 potential voters were turned away hecause of mistakes in registration.

to these adjusted figures, 22.45 per cent of the Arab population participated in the elections. It is this proportional increase which is the only valid indication of changes in voting patterns. Ninety-three per cent of the Arab vote went to incumbent Mayor Teddy Kollek, and almost the same amount to his One Jerusalem list for the council.

large, from the same sectors that always voted in the municipal elections — the semi-rural suburbs of Jerusalem like Silwan, Abu Tor, Beit Safafa and the Suwahra Be-

In these areas, the traditional practice of using the mukhtar, the village head, to bring in votes was unchanged, and Teddy Kollek's team of experienced Arabists were adept at utilizing their longestublished contacts and smooth campaign machinery.

East Jerusalem's Arab intelligentsia did not participate, apart from those directly employed by Israeli agencies such as the municipality, doctors and nurses who work with Kupat Holim Clalit and school teachers and principals. These people also constituted the main body of pro-Kollek local activists in East Jerusalem.

One of Kollek's aides in the Arab sector said that there was something of a change in attitude to these activists among their neighbours. "In the past, they were subject to far stronger pressures than they were

Another change noted by people in the Arab affairs section of City Hall was an increase in the number of women voters. Some 3,000 Arab women are estimated to have come to the polling booths, an increase of about 50 per cent over the last elec-

ANWAR NUSSEIBEH, former Jordanian defence minister and an acknowledged leader of East Jerusalem's Arabs, said in a TV interview this week that Kollek benefited from his long-established contacts with the city's Arab population and his projected image of an attitude of "live and let live." The Likud candidate, Shlomo Toussia-Cohen "was not helped" by his association with former defence minister Arik Sharon, said Nusseibeh, despite the veteran Jerusalem lawyer's fluency in Arabic.

Morris Zilka, Kollek's adviser on Arab affairs, said he believed that even if Jordan and the PLO had been more actively opposed to Arab participation in the elections, those who did vote would still have done so because of their fear of a Likuddominated council.

Relations with Jordan and the external leadership of the PLO have always been a complex amalgam of local pressure exerted for the external political interests of these parties and internally-invited pressure which provides an excuse for certain actions. In the run-up to the local elections there was no evidence of any Jordanian interest, while the PLO's response was late and confused when it did come into the standard argument that participation in the elections effective-ly recognized the "unilateral reunification of the city." But the naper also ran a translation of an article by Davar columnist Danny Rubinstein, calling on East Jerusalem to vote precisely because of the danger of a Likud victory.

The newspaper Al-Fajr, one of the recognized pro-PLO voices in the aren, published an editorial a few days before the elections repeating

In Shuafat particularly, a group of young activists called for a boycott of the elections and daubed the slogans referred to at the beginning of this article. But in the past, this kind of activity was far more widespread throughout the Arab suburbs.

Another East Jerusalem editor acknowledged that the activity of all the nationalist circles had been weakened, partly because of the activities of the West Bank civil administration and partly because of the rebellion within the PLO. Zilka thinks that the election results showed a pattern of increasing realism on the part of the local population when it came to local issues. "If this positive dynamic continues, I wouldn't be surprised if we see Arab candidates in the next municipal elections," he said.

LIKE PALESTINIANS on the West Bank, East Jerusalemites have adopted an attitude of quiet resignation to the apparent demise of the PLO and Arafat. But that has no detectable effect on the intensity of their national aspirations. "I will not deny that the situation is critical," said Akram Haniya of the pro-PLO 4-Sha'ab. because of the Israeli occupation, there simply must be some kind of national idea for the Palestinians, which is represented by the PLO." Palestinian nationalism "is like a genie released from a bottle. It can't be forced back into the same situation as 20 years ago." Nusseibeh, generally considered a pro-Jordanian figure in the Pulestinian political map, said in his TV interview that "as long as there is a cause, there is a need for that cause to be represented." The legitimute representative of that cause is the PLO, he added.

Two remarks at a private dinner party in an East Jerusalem home earlier this week are also indicative of the mood:

"If we don't wake up, we shall find out that our demands will soon be for equal civil rights rather than national rights," noted a lecturer at one of the West Bank universities. His host responded with a rhetorical question addressed to both his Palestinian and Israeli guests: "Are you not as tired of it all as we are?"

"You know, I turn hack to your ancient prophets in the Old Testament und the signs foretelling Armageddon. and I find myself wondering if - if we're the generation that's going to see that come about, I don't know if cou've noted any of those prophecies iately; but believe me; they certainly describe the times we're going

President Ronald Reagan, in a . phone conversation with Tom Dine of AIPAC, the pro-Israel lobbying group on Capitol Hill, before the bombing attack on U.S. Marine -headquarters in Beirut.

'AS AMERICAN resolve was being responses to the Marine deployment in Beirut, the leader of the Free World used a public telephone call to unburden himself of some dire apprehensions (as reported by Wolf Blitzer in the The Jerusalem Post. October 28). If any other person had referred to prophetic scripture as the grounding for an apocalyptic scenario, we could dismiss such foreboding as a symptom of melancholy brought on by the eruel realities of our time perhaps mitigated by the "consoling" expectation that much of this sinful world will soon meet its deserved destruction. An increasing number of Christian preachers and lay people, some of them professing great love for Israel, are today quoting passages in Ezekiel, Jeremiah and Isaiah, along with Gospel texts and the Book of "Revelation in the New Testament. to support their belief in an immi-· nent global cataclysm. The mass appeal of such apocalypticism is evidenced by the huge readership to books like Hal Lindsey's The Late Great Planet Earth and The z' 4980's: Countdown to Armageddon. This kind of Christian esghatology is unsettling to most Jews, and to a great many Christians, for it reflects an other-worldly escapism and a dualistic cosmology that anticipates with pious rapture the final, violent denouement between the forces of Good and Evil. In Christian tradition, Armageddon represents the cosmic triumph of God over Satan, Light over Darkness. Christ over the anti-

When an evangelical preacher uses this End-of-Days symbolism, Jews and less enraptured Christians can understand it as part of his vocation to reassure the faithful. But when an incumbent president of the U.S. uses such imagery in referring to the power struggles in the Middle East, one has good reason to be concerned, even alarmed. For he is one of the two human beings on this earth with the power to turn such apocalyptic fantasies into reality by unleashing an arsenal of doomsday weapons.

IN JEWISH tradition, biblical prophecy is not a foretelling of inevitable doom or destruction. Rather, it is a timely warning combined with a promise based on the covenantal bond between God and His people. The prophet chastises his own community, above all the corrupt establishment, for the sins which have estranged the people from the Prophecy is not synonymous with prediction. When the future is foreseen and foretold, it is not an unconditional, inevitable future. The outcome, whether redemptive or destructive, is always conditional -for it is dependent on human behaviour in response to God's

The prophetic appeal can only be understood within the framework of the covenant, that central biblical idea which applies not only to the hand between the Jewish people

Creator and all of humanity (symbolized by the rainbow shown to Noah and his family after the Flood). Whatever punishment, whatever suffering, whatever calamities God's people may un-dergo, the covenant is everlasting and redemption will finally blossom to bless all nations.

Apocalyptic thinking breaks this redemptive chain running throughout history, and makes a mockery of any notion of salvation.

It is true that Judaism - especialduring the time of the Second Temple, the immediate antecedent of Christianity — has its own Messianic midrashim that include cataclysmic visions of the End of Days. The Qumran scrolls demonstrate that the first century of the Common Era was rife with such apocalyptic hopes and dreams, as the Jews suffered increasingly under Roman oppression. And there are several cryptic passages in earlier prophetic literature - particularly Ezekiel, Daniel and Zechariah which can be interpreted in such a light if one chooses. Over the two millennia of exile and persecution, such visions of cosmic upheaval often served to comfort the Jews as they awaited the Messianic redemption that would bring them home to the Land of Israel as a selfgoverning and free people.

PRESIDENT Reagan referred to 'the times we're going through." What do the events of the past generation suggest in the light of biblical prophecy? To which and God, but also to the more inclusive relationship between the cryptic passages in scripture that mention God's wrath against the enemies of Israel, or the far more frequent exhortations against callousness and corruption by these lonely champions of justice and righteousness?

It is no doubt consoling to a political leader to identify himself and his nation with the people of God, and to demonize his political adversary so that the other becomes not only the obstacle to furthering the national interest but also Satan incarnate. The Children of Darkness versus the Children of

In an age of ultimate weaponry, capable of annihilating the entire human family, such dualistic ideologies and apocalyptic fantasies are understandable - and terribly dangerous. They are symptoms of a mental disease that threatens to spread and become terminal. All of us would then fall victim to self-fulfilled nightmares, not prophecies. Biblical psychology acknowledges the sinfulness of all human beings, including the prophets themselves. When we project evil onto our enemies and ignore our own sins, we are fuelling the polarization which has bred countless wars and helped to make humanity an endangered species.

The history of our time includes not only the Holocaust, the most demonic drama ever enacted on the human stage, but also the resurrection of the "dry bones" of Israel in the Jewish homeland. Is this not a 'sign of the times" in the direction of historical continuity and promise, a sign of prophetic hope as the Israeli national anthem "Hatikva" expresses? But even this miraculous restoration is conditioned on the implementation of justice and righteousness, as the prophet Isaiah declares (1,27): Zion will be redeemed through justice, and all those who return to her through. righteousness."

We cannot count on some Divine insurance plan to protect us whatever our actions — just as we cannot afford to be fatalistic about the future. We need to remember always that the choice between Good and Evil; Blessing and Curse, fe and Death on thi is in our hands.

A PRESIDENT of the United States, or a prime minister of Israel, ought to engage in some prophetic self-criticism in the exercise of political power. At the same time that Soviet or Syrian aggression is deterred by military means, a faithful defender of democracy and biblical values should also seek ways in which his limited resources may not be devoured by armaments while the root causes of most conflicts - poverty, hunger, and political oppression — continue to fester. It is these conditions of human misery and degradation throughout the world which provide fertile ground for Soviet, Cuban or Syrian adventurism in the name of the deprived masses - whether they be Salvadorans, Africans or Palestinians. The true prophetic spirit today would address these root conditions of injustice, instead of branding the Eastern bloc nations, or the Syrians, or the Iranians as the "Children of Darkness" who will be vanquished at Armageddon by the virtuous defenders of the true faith executing God's wrath. As a devout Catholic friend observes, such a political theology boils down to this perverse parody of John 3,16: "God so loved the world that He sent it World War

A FAITHFUL prophetic witness from the last World War, one who can inspire all biblical believers, was the German pastor Dietrich Bonhoeffer, executed by the Nazis after he joined a plot to assassinate Hitler. Writing at the end of 1942, just a few months before he would be arrested and jailed, Bonhoeffer composed the following lines, which include a reference to the faith of Jeremiah, tested at a time when the prophet himself was imprisoned:

"For most people, the compulsory abandonment of planning for the future means that they are forced back into living just for the moment, irresponsibly, frivolously. or resignedly; some few dream longingly of better times to come,

and try to forget the present.
"We find both these co equally impossible, and there remains for us only the very narrow way, often extremely difficult to find, of living every day as if it were our last, and yet living in faith and responsibility as though there were to be a great future: 'Houses and fields and vineyards shall again be bought in this land, proclaims Jeremiah (32,15), in paradoxical contrast to his prophecies of woe, just before the destruction of the Holy City. It is a sign from God and a pledge of a fresh start and a great future, just when all seems black.

'Thinking and acting for the sake of the coming generation, but being ready to go any day without fear or anxiety - that, in practice, is the spirit in which we are forced to live. It is not easy to be brave and keep that spirit alive, but it imperative."

ENTATION !

COURAGEOUSLY, a Soviet holar has spoken out against the anti-Jewish writings and discriminazion now so prevalent in the Soviet Linion. His name is Dr. Ivan Marlynov, and his protest comes in an dopen letter to the Praesidium of the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

> In his letter, Martynov appeals to all Soviet scholars to renounce the enti-Jewish policies and anti-Semitism of the world of Soviet cholarship. He is the first nonewish scholar to do so. .

Many westerners have asked, why do no non-Jewish scholars peak out inside the Soviet Union in behalf of their fellow Jewish holars? In his letter, Martynov eaks the mould of silence. He also invites other non-Jews like himself to join him in denouncing Soviet anti-Semitic writers. His letter calls or a public debate inside the Soviet Union. Such a call is an act of great igourage. Martynov deserves the deepest gratitude of all true lovers the Russian genius, and all nemics of the anti-Semitic publicaions, posters and cartoons which proliferate today throughout the Soviet Union.

MARTYNOV opens his courageous Letter by denouncing the popular Soviet historian, Lev Korneyev, who in a recent issue of the Leningrad magazine Neva. Mescribed Adolf Eichmann as a victim of Zionist terrorists.'

Korneyev also argued, in his Neva article, that the figure of six million LECARADA SELEC. Sewish dead in the Holocaust is tiwo to three times" exaggerated. Such a claim, Martynov charges, is a propagation of "the ideas of the modern American professor, anti-Semite Arthur Butz, > Martynov publicly rebukes his colleague Korneyev for this 'blasphemous'' suggestion. He also points out that Korneyev has claimed that so-called "Zionists" inside the Soviet Union attempt to blacken Soviet national history and the Soviet cultural heritage.

In his letter of protest, Martynov points out that there is no real difference in current Soviet anti-Semitic writing between those who are denounced as "Zionists" and all Soviet Jews "who are aware of their MARTYNOV notes that Korneyev and other anti-Semites have also claimed that there has been an "excessive emphasis" on the contribution of Jewish scientists and artists Fin their role in the history of those Beoples whose civilization they have adopted." This, Martynov argues. is a "falsification" which brings "shame" on the Soviet people - his -people.

British historian Martin Gilbert describes an appeal by a non-Jewish Soviet scientist for an end to anti-Semitism and for an acknowledgement of the Jewish contribution to Soviet endeavours.

Scholar's plea over Russia's 'dangerous tradition'

Right: The front page of one of Korneyev's most recent pamphlets. in which he states that the figure of six million Holocaust deaths is "two to three times exaggerated." This copy of the pamphlet, which is published by the Pravda publishing house, was bought by the author at a kiosk on a Moscow boulevard.

Martynov explains that, as a contributor to the magazine Neva himself, he can no longer keep silent while that magazine continues publish anti-Semitic articles. He he explains, a Russian, a Russian Orthodox Christian by religion, brought up in a Russian home, "for whom Russian culture is both my life's work and gives meaning to my

In a rare glimpse, for any Soviet citizen, of his upbringing and background, Martynov tells of the influence of Jews in his own life. Since his "first steps in science," he thins, he that always worked in close contact with Jews, and was aware of their "deepest respect for," and contribution to, Russian history, life and culture.

"EVERYTHING that is good in me," Martynov declares, "I owe to the Jews." He goes on to explain that it was his schoolteacher, a Jewess, who taught him in his youth "to understand and to love Russian literature and folklore," the main subject of his subsequent scientific work. Later, as a student, he was helped by two teachers, both of them Jewish, both of them "brilliant experts in Russian bibliography. These two Jewish scholars, Martynov points out, were "talented disseminators of Russian culture," contrary to the claims made by ignoramuses" that the Jews have made no such contributions.

Martynov goes on to write of his "long years of friendship and fruitful scientific co-operation" with two Soviet Jews who subsequently emigrated from the Soviet Union on Israeli invitation (the only way a Soviet Jew can leave). Both of these men. Martynov stresses, "worked actively for the benefit of Russia and achieved significant results." Yet both are among those accused in the Soviet Press of trying to "blacken" Soviet culture.

MARTYNOV then describes the pressures and barriers to Jewish scholarship in the Soviet Union, even when the Jews concerned were working to enhance the study of purely Russian themes and researches - the elucidation of Russian history and literature.

One such Jewish scholar, he reveals, was not allowed to defend his doctoral thesis "on the origins of Russian Slavophilism." It was only when he reached the United States that he was able to do so. A second scholar, also a Jew, was unable to obtain any official recognition, or even an official mention, of his discovery of a lost 19th-century Russian library of permanent importance to Russian literature. This discovery, writes Martynov, "did not bring my friend any scientific titles, trips abroad or other signs of appreciation bestowed by society upon authors revealing such sensational discoveries."

Even when the missing library was restored to the Soviet Academy of Sciences, the director of the library of the academy "did not even find it necessary to mention the name of the person who had discovered it." Why not? Because that nerson was a Jew who had

THIS CASE, says Martynov, is part of what he calls the "fallacious and dungerous tradition" that has grown in the Soviet Union during the past few years according to which "the emigration or repatriation of a Jewish scientist from the USSR, no matter what his future political position will be, automatically imposes a 'taboo' on his works and on mentioning his very name."

Martynov gives a number of examples of how books by Jewish scholars - books already published by Soviet publishing houses and "approved for publication by the Soviet censors" - were "removed" from bookstores and public libraries, and even from specialist libraries of scientific literature, once that scholar emigrated. From that moment, every reference to the author's scientific work in other scholarly publications was either removed altogether or, where coauthorship was involved, replaced by the words "and others." The Jewish author thus becomes anonymous. His name no longer appears in the catalogues and bibliographies of the subject he has so long enhanced: only the words "and others."

At the end of the 20th century, Martynov remarks with wry humour, Russian publications will have "a lot of trouble" with the "incredibly prolific and extremely versatile author who appears under the strange pen name 'and others."

FOR THE first time, in Martynov's letter, a Soviet scholar reveals yet another facet of anti-Jewish discrimination. Jewish scholars in the Soviet Union, he writes, solely in the "interests of Russian culture," allow their discoveries to be published under the names of other, non-Jewish, colleagues.

In this way, they make their contribution to Russian scholarship, but without any chance of recognition. These are the same people, Martynov points out, who are allegedly striving to "exaggerate" at any price their role in Russian scholarship.

"I find it shameful and painful." Martynov adds, "to realize that for a number of years I agreed, because of my weakness and faintheartedness (even though my friends who left the USSR had persistently asked me to do so), to the publication, under my name only, of papers on which we worked together."

By this device, Martynov comments, he was himself assisting "in artificially minimizing the role of scientists 'of Jewish origin' in the history of Russian culture."

Without this device, there was no way that these researches could become known. Yet with it, by, dropping their names, important Jewish contributions to Soviet research will never be known, and the name of the Jewish scholar is lost. Someone else, a non-Jew, receives the credit.

MARTYNOV pleads for an end to this hiding of the Soviet Jewish contribution. He starts the process of change in his own letter, naming those Jewish scholars to whose articles he attached his own name, replacing theirs.

"Having realized and strongly condemned my mistake," Martynov writes, "I appeal hereby to all my Soviet colleagues" - and there follows his appeal:

"I. To fight resolutely for the cancellation of all the discriminatory measures against scientists of 'Jewish origin' who emigrated or repatriated from the USSR, including their right to take out with them their unpublished works and scientific materials (if the latter are not of a classified character, or contain slanderous fabrications on the state system of the USSR, or are planned group projects)."

"2. Not to publish their works in publishing houses and publications that discriminate against scientists of Jewish origin' who emigrated or repatriated from the USSR.

"3. To condemn mercilessly and to expel from the scientific community L.A. Korneyev, a professionally bankrupt ignoramus and falsifier who disseminates the most inveterate Black Hundred type of anti-Semitism on the pages of the Soviet press under the guise of 'a struggle against international

MARTYNOV'S appeal is not mere words. At the same time, he has resigned his own post-doctoral title which, he argued, had been put "to shame" and discredited by the title conferred on the anti-Semitic writer

As well as resigning his title, Mar-tynov has demanded "a public discussion of his reasons" at the Scientific Council of the Leningrad Institute of Culture.

'l also demand," Martynov's letter ends, "that my open letter to the Praesidium of the Academy of Sciences be published in the Soviet scientific press."

Martynov's appeal is not anti-Soviet. On the contrary, it is an appeal to redress a wrong against Soviet Jewry, and to re-establish the reputation of Soviet scholarship.

Both groups were close in agreement that American support for Israel is in America's interest, but there was still a 12 point difference: 91 per cent of American Jews polled agreed with the statement, but just 79 per cent of the Israeli Jews. Response was nearly identical among Americans and Israelis asked about the possibility of the U.S. ceasing to be a firm ally of Asrael. "If it comes to the crunch, will few non-Jews come to Israel's aid in its struggle to survive?" Some 54 per cent of the American sample answered positively, compared to just 42 per cent of the Israelis. Foreign-born Israelis were more similar to the Americans in their view, but more Israeli-born Jews did

How do Israelis perceive President Ronald Reagan's attitude of African or Asian origin, only 29 towards the Jewish State? Thirty-six per cent saw him as generally friendly; 36 per cent said he was neutral or had mixed feelings; and 19 per cent said he was generally unfriendly. The American Jewish sample answered respectively 33, 44 and 17 per cent.

The two groups were quite dif-ferent when asked whether American Jewish organizations and individuals should feel free to criticize publicly the government and policies of Israel. Sixty per cent of American Jews agreed that American Jewish organizations should feel free to criticize, and 57 per cent thought individuals should also be allowed to voice criticism. compared to 45 per cent and 42 per cent respectively of the Israelis. Asked whether Jews should not vote for candidates who are unfriendly to Israel, 73 per cent of the Americans accepted this idea, compared to just 56 per cent for the per cent agreed with the statement.

TWENTY-NINE per cent of those Israelis interviewed had visited the U.S., and 44 per cent had relatives there. Over 60 per cent of both the American and Israeli Jews agreed that anti-Semitism may become a serious problem in the U.S.

While 65 per cent of the Israelis thought anti-Semitism is currently not a serious problem for American Jews, 43 per cent of American Jews were seriously concerned about anti-Semitism. Just 27 per cent of American Jews who were asked whether virtually all positions of influence are open to American Jews believed they were, while 59 per cent of the Israelis thought American Jews could get any job they liked.

Only 36 per cent of the Israelis thought life in the U.S. is really good for its Jews, and 29 per cent said that the good life for American Jews can't last for long. Fifty-nine per cent of the Israelis said that most American Jews think of themselves mainly as Americans, and not as Jews, and 70 per cent said most American Jews don't

ortale risk of decort

Israelis appear to be seriously worried about the survival of American Jews as Jews. Seventyfour per cent agreed that the influence of assimilation is so great that they are in danger of not surviving as Jews; even 72 per cent of secular Israelis agreed with this.

ONE OF the most surprising finds was that 44 per cent of secular Israelis agreed that "only strong Orthodox religion can save American Jews from assimilating. Of the entire Israeli sample, 55 per cent agreed, and 70 of the Orthodox Israelis polled concurred. Asked whether Reform and Conservative Judaism lead to assimilation, 31 per cent of Israelis agreed, 47 per cent disagreed and 22 per cent were not

As for Zionism, 58 per cent of the Israelis believe that America is Galut and that the Jews there should come en masse on aliya, but 77 per cent said there is at present no chance for significant aliya from the Seventy per cent of the Israelis want UJA money to be sent to Israel, while only 14 per cent think more should be going to strengthening Jewish life there with less money coming to Israel.

There is great divergence between American and Israeli Jews on the matter of Israeli emigration: Yerida apparently is still a bad word in Israel. Seventy per cent of the Israelis said that Israelis who emigrate are "doing something wrong," but only 16 per cent of the American Jews agreed with that

As for Israeli political figures. American Jews had the most positive opinion of Abba Eban as a political leader, with 61 per cent giving him a "very favourable" rating, compared to an 8 per cent rating by the Israelis. American Jews gave Menachem Begin a 34 per cent positive rating (the Israelis, 29 per cent); Yitzhak Navon, 22 per cent (the Israelis 53 per cent); Yitzhak Rabin, 26 per cent (the Israelis, 19 per cent); Shimon Peres 19 per cent (the Israelis, 3 per cent); and Ariel Sharon 22 per cent, with a similar 20 per cent among Israelis.

The percentage of Americans and Israelis willing for Israel to offer territorial compromise in the West Bank in return for credible guarantees for peace was nearly identical: about 42 per cent.

But on the question of retaining permanent control over Judea and Samaria, the Americans were more dovish: 42 per cent favoured this compared to 56 per cent of the Israelis. Asked about talking to the PLO if that organization recognized Israel and ceased terrorism, 70 per cent of American Jews favoured talks, while only 48 per cent of the Israelis did.

Perhaps surprisingly, 38 per cent of the Israelis were concerned that continued Israeli occupation of the territories would erode Israel's democratic and humanitarian character, compared to only 26 per cent of the American Jews.

Another great divergence was found when the two populations were asked whether Israelis who strongly criticize some of their government's policies are bad for Israel: 60 per cent of the Israelis answered positively, and only 17 per cent of the Americans did.

- 51 per cent - agreed that generation. Israeli's commitment to democratic values had eroded in recent years, compared to 24 per cent of the U.S.

Some 79 per cent of U.S. Jews thought Israel should grant Conservative and Reform rabbis the same status as Orthodox rabbis, and only 47 per cent of the Israelis thought so. Both groups were quite optimistic that the social gap between Ashkenazi and Sephardi Jews in Israel would disappear within a

Smith notes in conclusion that just as Israelis expressed greater faith in the security of American Jews than they did themselves, American Jews expressed greater confidence in the strength of Israeli democracy than the Israelis did themselves. But both agreed that the ties between the two communities were strong and lasting, and that despite any short-range differences between them, their future was inextricably linked.

which had deliberately gone ahead _ with the arrangements, ignoring the Isrueli warnings. The consulate was therefore responsible for the unpleasant way the visit ended. The consulate is responsible for contacts with Palestinians in the West Bank, but it is the embassy in Tel Aviv which deals with Gaza.

Donald Hamley, the consulgeneral, said last night there was precedent for the Israelis allowing Palestinian mayors and other leaders under restriction orders to come to Jerusalem to meet visiting ministers. He recalled the September 1980 visit by the Luxembourg Foreign Minister, Gaston Thorn, who was the EEC commissioner at the time.

The Israeli reaction as conveyed to me was that they were not happy with our request, but it was not a clear no," Hamley said. He explained that Luce's tight schedule and a long-observed ban on visiting ministers going into the West Bank, which is regarded as occupied territory, did not allow him to go and see Shak'a in Nablus or Khalaf in Ramaliah.

Security forces placed the deposed mayor of Nablus, Bassam Shak'a, under one-day house arrest yesterday morning and also prevented his colleague from Ramallah, Karim Khalafa, and the chairman of the Gaza Red Crescent Society, Dr. Haider Abdel Shafi, from leaving their towns. All three men are recognized PLO spokesmen in the territories.

A spokesman for the Judea and · Samaria Civil Administration said yesterday that Shak'a had been un-

The visiting U.S. Undersecretary of State. Lawrence Eagleburger, is due to tour the West Bank and meet some Palestinians tomorrow. American consular officials here would not provide any details, but confirmed that "he would be spending the day with us,"

Luce last visited Jerusalem 20 years ago. He spent yesterday morning seeing the development of the city. He crossed the Allenby Bridge into Jordan late yesterday and is to go on to Cairo.

A mid-morning working meeting was planned to include Shak'a. Shafi, Jerusalem Electric Company chairman Anwar Nusseibeh and Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, Nusseibeh demonstratively left the meeting on hearing of the restrictions placed on the other participants and it was only Freij who held one-hour discussion with Luce, which both sides later termed "useful." Freij said that he had complained about Israeli settlements and had given his view that there were no political solutions in view. He urged the EEC to be more active in promoting a settlement for the Palestinians and asked for more economic aid for the territories.

Shak'a was also informed yesterday that the military authorities would not allow him to leave the West Bank to travel to the U.S. to receive the freedom of the city of Livorna in Michigan. Shak'a had also asked to go to the U.S. to receive medical treatment, but the military authorities say the only purpose of his journey is political.

Berri went on to describe the resolution as "not a solution" to the issue of Israeli occupation. "It's a step to arrive at a solution," he ad-

Asked whether he thought the resolution meant the May 17 agreement was dead, Berri replied "I think it was born dead."

Earlier, Jemayel held marathon talks with opposition figures in an attempt to find compromise language which sources said would set aside Lebanon's pact with Israel.

Both pro-government and opposition sources said the delegates to the Lebanese National Reconciliation Conference were moving toward a compromise which would avoid outright abrogation of the May 17 accord but ensure that concessions it grants Israel would not go into effect.

A well-informed opposition source told reporters his group, which includes Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt, had "a maximalist and a ninimalist" position regarding the agreement, under which Israel agreed to withdraw its troops from Lebanon in return for economic, political and security guarantees. The source said the opposition would accept a "freeze" rather than outright cancellation - "if freezing means it's dead."

A Christian source, when asked if the agreement would be "frozen," replied, "oh definitely."

PRICE OF RECOVERY

consideration. Changes in health and education fees, he said, would be discussed in the framework of a general survey of transfer payments at Sunday's cabinet meeting. Cohen-Orgad conceded that his new economic policies would bring. about a temporary increase in unemployment, and would cause a drop in production during the initial period.

One-industry areas, such as development towns, would get special consideration in this respect. "We must deal with local problems," he said. "But that does not mean that we should set a country-wide policy because of problems in development towns."

There would be considerable pressure, he said, to move workers into export-oriented industries. And, he disclosed, a bill would be presented to the Knesset next week increasing (from 40 to 60 kms.) the distance from his home within which a job-seeker must accept a job offered by the labour exchange. The new law, Cohen-Orgad said, would also tighten the definition of "appropriate work," preventing some employment-hunters from rejecting positions without sufficient

Much of the unemployment, he said, would come in the services and in the construction industry. He predicted that many workers from the territories would again look for jobs in Judea, Samaria and Gaza. For these workers, the possibility of employment in neighbouring countries was also an option, he proposals to cut the amount of foreign currency that Israelis can take abroad from $3,000 per capita to $1,500. "That just invites people to go the black market to buy their dollars," he said.

Nor does he intend to make it illegal for Israelis to keep the foreign cash they already hold - "That would make them law-breakers retroactively.

He hoped that when the current turmoil had subsided, Israelis would make their way to the banks to deposit their dollars, thus taking advantage of "more attractive" interest rates in Patam accounts.

Cohen-Orgad said that he sees "no reason to change the liquidity of Patam, foreign-currency-linked accounts of local residents. In fact, he hinted that an increase in the interest rates the banks offer on Patam accounts would make them a more attractive investment for Israelis Ouestioned about wage linkage. Cohen-Orgad said that there was "a need to re-examine all of the wageprice structures." He indicated that the government planned "to main-tain current levels of subsidies at 50 to 55 per cent for a substantial period." That, he said, "demands periodic increases, in keeping with current inflation.

The promise to maintain current levels did not seem to apply to power rates, with Cohen-Orgad saying that the deficit of the Electric Corporation would have to be cut 'by a substantial amount" within the next year.

Asked about the effect of the cuts on national projects, Cohen-Orgad said that the Lavi fighter-plane development "is being carried out with maximum efficiency." There would be no new cuts, he said, in the Med-Dead Sea Canal budget, since the budget, together with that of the rest of the Energy Ministry, had been trimmed back in August. The cost of the IDF's presence in Lebanon, the minister emphasized, should not be considered in purely economic terms. He called it a "matter of survival," as part of the defence of the northern frontier.

Cohen-Orgad, who is building a home in the West Bank settlement of Ariel, said that the settlement budget would be affected by the cuts "in proportion to its share of the total expenditure."

He pointed out that two-thirds of the $400 million allocated to settlement in Judea, Samaria and Gaza was earmarked for noncontroversial projects inside the Al-

on Plan lines.
"Only the remaining third which in its total only amounts to six-tenths of a per cent of the entire budget - goes to those settlements on which there is substantial public controversy," he said.

country.

The fire-brigade spokesman said that more than 100 people and 25 fire engines, including five from the Israel Defence Forces, were involved in fighting the blaze. Their task was made more difficult because of strong easterly winds which fanned the flames from tree to tree, and also because of the rocky terrain. The fire fighters formed a defensive line along a narrow fire-break track only a few metres from the border of the wildlife reserve. As they extinguished the fire in one area, flames burst out in other sections of woodland, Tall pine trees, which had taken years to reach their full size, crashed to the ground as flames leaped eagerly along their trunks and branches.

Salman Abu Rukn of the Nature Reserve Authority's Green Patrol stopped for a moment on a ridge overlooking the fire-ravaged area and said it would take years for the greenery and wildlife to return. While he was speaking, planes came in low to spray water on area where the fire was fiercest, by minutes later the flames broke of again. The planes returned to Haif airport where they were resupplied with water and returned again and again to the blaze.

Meanwhile, Itim reports, large teams of fire fighters fought a blaz which broke out between the Trap pist monastery in Latrun and Kin butz Nahson. By AVI TEMKIN
Fears of a light recession and criticism of banks and financial authorities were the main subjects of deliberations yesterday at the Knesset Finance Committee. At the outset members strongly attacked Bank of Israel Governor Moshe Mandelbaum, who did not appear, although he had been invited. A bank spokesman later told

The Jerusalem Post that Mandelbaum had to meet Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad and therefore sent one of his top aides, Victor Medina, who heads the bank's monetary department, in his stead.

Medina told the MKs that there is much uncertainty about the inprices on the business sector, since a large part of its liquid assets was in bank shares.

The Alignment's faction head in the committee, MK Adi Amorai, attacked the commercial banks and the financial authorities for their role in the crisis. "It is not only Yoram Aridor who should have been punished for what happened," he said.

Amorai added that the Treasury and the Bank of Israel are continuing to fail in their management of the crisis.

THE VICTORY of Raul Alfonsin in Argentina's presidential elections this week has brought "a note of relief and optimism" to Argentina's Jewish community, according to Prof. Manuel Tenenbaum, executive director of the Latin American branch of the World Jewish Congress.

He noted that in the aftermath of the elections, which represented a stunning defeat for the Peronists, the recent anti-Semitic resurgence in the country seemed to have subsided — at least for the time being. Alfonsin, a former congressman and co-founder of the Argentine Permanent Assembly for Human Rights, was the candidate of the Radical Civic Union, a middle-class party. He won 52 per cent of the vote, while the Peronist candidate, Italo Luder, won 40 per cent. The Peronists have dominated Argentina's political scene since their party was founded in 1945 by Juan Peron.

torate and displayed a clear preference for the Radicals' Alfonsin. He stressed that the pro-Alfonsin vote of the Jewish electorate was motivated both by general considerations as well as particular Jewish concerns.

the Jewish voter expressed the desire for a return to democratic institutional life, said Tenenbaum. On a strictly Jewish level, he believed that the Radical Party offered more guarantees, "due to its democratic make-up and its rejection of xenophobic trends."

The Jewish vote, he pointed out, was an important factor only in the capital. Buenos Aires, where it comprised about 9 per cent of the total. There were no Jewish candidates for any significant posts, and only a few small parties directed their cumpaigns specifically at winning Jewish support. These included the Social Democrat Party and the Christian Democrat Party.

Among the expectations of tions - which will lead to a return to civilian rule - are the promulation of a law outlawing and-Semitism, the exclusion from the public school system of subjects which might irritate Jewish sensitivity, the elimination of the invision ble hurdles which block Jewish'as cess to certain public positions, and a balanced foreign policy with regard to the Middle East.

On the eve of the elections, the DAIA — the central representative body of Argentine Jewry published a statement in the general press reaffirming its unswerving policy of complete neutrality with regard to the various political

In a general assessment Tenent baum said that the election displayed two fundamental traits if was undoubtedly democratic and m expressed a clear desire for change — not only with the immediate party but also with 40 years of Percental politics.

Bubble gum celebrities

CURTAIN CALL / Marsha Pomerantz

E Fellas who run into each other in a thosel room: a senator, a professor. curactress and a baliplayer. Damned Laf they don't look like Joe Accurthy, Albert Einstein, Marilyn Monroe and Joe DiMaggio.

The play is Terry Johnson's In-: F-significance, a hit at the Royal Court in last year, translated as Invan Shuli and opening this week at Beit Lessin in Tel Aviv. It's about human relativity, fame, solifluction, solip-Sism, bubble gum, and the belief of revery Cherokee that he is the centre of the world.

At a reneursal ethat the problem with playing Monroe is the risk of perpetuating t the cardboard image. She prepared for the role by reading biographies and seeing most of Monroe's films.

At the start of the play, she concentrates on the superficial image - the strut and the wiggle - and gradually focuses more on the "interior" person. Atzmon is convinced of Monroe's intelligence — evidenced in the play during a discussion with Einstein of special relativity, among other things.

Einstein faults her for knowing rather than understanding, which is not a bad score for an allegedly "dumb blonde.

Yossi Karmon, who is currently appearing in two Hanoch Levin plays and about to start rehearsals for a third, is more sceptical about the value of background reading in preparing for a role. He points out that the subject of this play is not so far removed in time as to require thorough research. After all, he plays Einstein, "not Brutus." And. of course, the characters that must convince are those created by the playwright, not necessarily those depicted by the biographers.

What determines the success of a role is "your relation to what you say on stage." From the first time he read the play, he identified with the Einstein it portayed. "But that doesn't make it easy," he says.

riews follow Shraga Harpaz, simplifying the world in DiMaggio fashion, says Karmon has it tough but his own role is a chinch: "Joe DiMaggio iust Hereas I'm keen wanted one thing from his wife. He wanted her to stay home." In preparing for the play, though, he did talk to a baseball expert in Tel Aviv about how to swing that ommipresent imaginery bat.

during the play, leaving a trail of wrappers, and discourses to Einstein on his own fame as measured by gum-wrapper portaits.

The real DiMaggio, still very much alive, continues to put flowers on Monroe's grave once a year, says Harpaz. In fact, he has gone to court to get an injunction against the production of Insignificance in the U.S. Maybe he's not so simple after ail.

Eyal Gefen, who plays McCarthy, points out that he resembles him in rotundity and says he prepared for the role by finding a living model for the use of power. Ariel Sharon. He did some reading about McCarthy "and you guess the rest."

Again, "it's the person that you play, not what's written about him." These stars move through the firmament - in this case, a New York hotel room in 1953 - at the direction of Gedalia Besser, who also brought Otto Weininger back to life in Yehoshua Sobol's Soul of a Jew. Insignificance is one of about six self-image," he says. Beit Lessin also wants to sell tickets, of course; 70 per cent of the budget is from their own receipts. But commercial success is a consideration for the season, not for each play, Agnon says.

"There has to be something in the repertoire for everyone."

THERE WAS something for everyone at a recent book party at the Neve Zedek Theatre Centre in Tel Aviv: Domino Press was celebrating the publication of The Community Theatre by Yossi Alfi, who has extensive experience in the field and teaches in the drama department of Tel Aviv University, change..., change each of the guests was given three crêpe streamers - either red or yellow or green - and told he had to have one of each colour by the ead of the evening. There was wine upstairs to fuel the social and esthetic intercourse. Some guests emerged with bow-ties and braids and veritable thatches of multi-colour crêpe: others doggedly stayed in a corner and stuck to yellow.

At the entrance to Neve Zedek.

All this, we were informed in the auditorium, was an exercise in developing a sense of community and getting all the guests to act a role. Among the guest-participants were social workers, professional actors, playwrights, publishers and readers of books.

Dr. Louis Miller, former chief psychiatrist at the Health Ministry, talked about his interest in developing community work among immigrants as a political tool: to secure services without creating dependency For Alfi himself, community theatre was partly a matter of identifying the local drama - and creating the audience to respond to it. Community and neighbourhood are not necessarily identical - a community can be any group with shared values. There's no shortage of material in Israel.

Alfi, who spent 12 years abroad, said: "We have the most dramatic country in the world."

The audience, itching under its crèpe, was treated to a few of those dramas. Perhaps the most surpising was performed by the senior citizens of Ramat Amidar, in Ramat Gan. Their Island of Wonders has to do with the wish to be young again - but to get permission to go to the island of youth, they must all pass physicals, which they manage, with little collusion from the doctor.

The group may not reach Broadway, but they do reach each other and some of the rest of us. A group from Remez in Pardess

Hanna seemed both talented and provocative: their Profile 21 is about a family that sees its Yehuda as a big success in the army - until he drops out under the psycho-social clause and starts hanging around town looking like the raw material for a good robbery.

It's done with the humour and honesty of those who know what they're talking about. And supporters of community theatre feel that the expression itself creates such a country for commemorating every multiple of five years, 10 years, 13 years and 18 years, like very little children celebrate their birthdays. I imagine we do this because life is so precarious here that reaching such milestones provokes surprise, joy and Throughout all the years I have been on the job, it has been my custom to provide regular advice to Television House, with great kindliness and courtesy, about how television programmes should be produced. I have not been deterred by the disdain with which my sagacious counsel has been treated: there has never been the slightest indication that anybody in Israel Television ever bothered to read what I wrote, although I did hear conce from Jordan Television, through an attractive Austrian newspaperwoman, that they appreciated my comments on their programmes.

Nevertheless, despite the way my words have disappeared like snow upon the desert's dusty face, I have gone on and on and on, with commendable tenacity, proffering my excellent advice.

After 15 years, a miracle has now occurred. There is clear, unequivocal and indisputable evidence that certain persons in Television House not only read something I wrote, but acted with impressive speed to comply with my requests.

The wonderful people concerned are the producers of the new magazine, Anything Goes. After 1 saw their first show, I approved of them in principle, but I urged them · lo change their seating arrangements by getting rid of that tough bench on which four people sat in great discomfort. I ordered them to introduce comfortable seating "worthy of the Club patronized by Sir Humphrey and his fellow senior Livil servants in Yes Minister. THEY ": HAVE DONE JUST WHAT I RE-

"Ah," I can hear some viewer out there sneering, "it is sheer egotism." to assume that they introduced the change just because you suggested in his more likely that the guests rehelled and refused to sit on the

But I have further proof. I sugrested that the two hosts, Batya a. Burak and Dan Hamitzer, should be more flexible in conducting their interviews, and not insist on working rigidly through all the questions they had swotted up before the programme began. They should let Al Hamishmar had not deigned to their guests take any line they wanted, and pay attention to what these guests were saying. THEY

There may be more sneers from the unbelievers. So now I produce my final and incontrovertible item of evidence. I pleaded with them to abandon the Israel Television game of swallowing the names of VIPs interviewed on the programme, so as to oblige us to try to identify them. Failure to do so proved that we were not "in" people, who know the jet-setters and pace-setters of our donment of the British sherry-party style of introduction, guaranteed to preserve the anonymity of the person introduced, and the use of the excellent Germanic system of everybody announcing loud and clear "Beethoven" or "Marx" or 'Goethe" or whatever his name is.

wanted. He looks us straight in the eye and proclaims, like a footman at the ball, "Professor Higgins" or whoever it may be. He relapsed slightly into the old-fashioned way by gulping the name of Ruthie Holtzman who sang that very witty song about Maccabi Tel Aviv's victory and our dream of a warm winter. But he scored at least 90 per cent. Batya Barak did a terrific job telling us that professor Gabriella Shalev of the Hebrew University's law faculty, Ezra Sohar of Ben-Gurion University and Tuvia Sa'ar of Israel Television were her guests. That's the way to introduce people. So who said the age of miracles

ACTUALLY, such is the cussedness of human nature, I was rather irritated when Hamitzer introduced his first guest in stentorian tones, because, as it happened, I would have got full marks for him in the identification game. That head, both in profile and full face, that figure, that voice, that occupation her. When she told him of the horhave now surrendered completely at a nod from the prime minister, he kept up a refrain, "I'm amazed, I'm amazed. I'm amazed..." Why he does not know what is happening in his schools is beyond my comprehension.

Orgad made the sensational announcement that he was ending the suicidal liberalization policy introduced by the late Simha Ehrlich with such a flourish of ill-tuned trumpets in 1977. Cohen-Orgad did this in the blandest way possible, citing Norway, Sweden and Finland as countries which do not allow free dealings in dollars. He might also have mentioned such countries as Great Britain, France and South Africa - financial pygmies compared to the Israeli giant, in the view of the Likud until now which never hesitated to control the right to deal in foreign currency.

The interviewer on this programme exasperated me by interrupting Gad Ya'acobi to argue that we all made mistakes, but that at this time of crisis we must all rally round the government. He stuck to this theme even after he accepted Ya'acobi's amendment that we had not all made mistakes, the government had. This cliche that we should get together behind the government is Nonsense, unless it is to find the right position to kick them out for the mess they have made.

On the same programme, we saw

! learn that in the panic in America in 1929, $3b. disappeared: in our October panie, $5b. went with the wind. This suggests a theme song for the Likud: "Anything you can do, i can do better, i can do anything better than you."

I have urged for years an aban-

Dan Hamitzer is doing just what I

Jerusalem Post!" He brought us two very amusing examples of how the views of a newspaper tend to affect the news it brings to its readers. Hamodiva covered the recent municipal elections with a four column banner headline proclaiming the triumph in Bnei Brak. Rath also showed us that notice on its front page the defeat of Yosef Nevo in Herzliya. Analysing these distortions, he suggested that newspapers sometimes may delude themselves that, by publishing what they want to happen, they can change the facts. There is an interesting philosophical question here: if the tree falls in the forest without the media being on hand to note the vent, does the tree really fall?

A newspaper may also justify its parochialism by claiming that it is giving its customers exactly what they want, that the readers of Hamodiva are more interested in what happened in Baei Brak than they are in what occurred in the rest of the country. The British sporting press is more likely to headline a soccer story, "British robbed by rogue "ref" than "Danes dominate game completely." We learned that such things could not happen to The Jerusalem Post. Hamitzer, who had obviously done his homework, pointed out that the story about The Post getting the Agron Prize was relegated to a corner of page three, and was not given a banner headline on page one. Views never colour Post news. If ever the Likud government should do anything good - which is unlikely - I am sure that the report will get on to page one.

THERE WERE other interesting items on Anything Goes. Professor Shalev's analysis of the legal aspects of the great Med Sea Bubble was very lucid, although I would be very surprised if the shrewdies who took the nation to the cleaners are ever brought to book by any commission. Tuvia Sa'ar promised us that J.R. would be back, - appropriately, on April 1 - because of some rather unconvincing statistics gleuned in a survey. Professor. Yitzhak Parnes justified, as if justification were needed, the right of universities to exist. Professor Sohar's counsel on dieting must have been welcomed by all those portly people who resist the thin person trying to get out of their slesh. He said that people find the weight that is most comfortable for them when they are in their twenties, and should stick to that. So we can eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we'll diet.

BY ANY standard, Bargil Pixner. OSB, is an extraordinary monk. His lecturing and writing on archeology and early church history continue to provoke new reflection on longheld assumptions, and his longing for Christian unity has led him to a unique grass roots initiative.

One of his provocative actions. which deserves to be recalled, occurred 62 years ago in Northern Italy near the Austrian border, Drafted into World War II, the young man refused to take an oath of allegiance to Hitler. When he heard an SS officer making fun of the biblical injunction to love thy neighbour. Piener remarked, "I cannot hate anyone," and later affirmed, "The Jews also are my brothers."

Pixner has been in Israel since 1968. He studied at Ulpan Etzion and worked as a volunteer for four months at Kibbutz Majale Hahamisha. Since 1972, he has lived as a Benedictine monk, spending about half his time at the Dormition Abbey on Mt. Zion, the other half at Tahgha.

He admits that his article in a forthcoming issue of Revue de Quinran on the copper scroll from cave 3 near Qumran "is likely to stir some controversy," as he challenges the conclusion of Quinran scholar J.T. Milik that the list of 64 hiding places of treasures is purely legen-

"The copper scroll's description of the eaches and contents is factual, sober and concise, insists Pixner. "It lacks exaggerations and embellishments. I think that the treasures were linked with the main centres of the Essene community. I suggest that the copper scroll was put in cave 3 before 68 C.E. by the Essene community at Qumran, just before the Roman army arrived.

The use of Henrew on the copper scroll is an important testimony to the popular use of Hebrew in everyday life in the first century C.E.," adds the Benedictine monk.

Pixner's fascination with the Essenes preceded his exploration of cave 3 and his study of the copper scroll. He is also interested in the problem of the historical identification of Mt. Zion. His reading of the 1894 report of Bliss and Dickey's excavation led to his own dig in association with field archeologist Shlomo Margain and Prof. Doron Chen, a specialist in archeological design at Tel Aviv University.

"Our most exciting discovery was the Essene Gate, found at one end of the Protestant cemetery on the slopes of Mt. Zion, it was under two later gates, one from the time of Hudokia, about 450, and the middle one, perhaps from the time of Acolia Capitolina, The lowest gate predates the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 C.E. Below the gate, we found a sewage canal. The road leading to the gate continues inside the city. We found more of it during the 1982 season." (An earlier report of the aig is found in "An Essene Quarter on Mt. Zion," Studia Hierosolvmitana, Pt. 1, No. 22, 1976)

"Simeon har Cleopha, a cousin of Jesus, returned from Pella (where the Christians had 2nd before the destruction of Jerusalem) and built a Judeo-Christian synagogue on Mt. Zion about 75 C.E. Pinkerfield excavated near the present Tomb of David in 1951 and found a mosaic and Christian graffiti about 60-70 centimetres below the present level. He believed that it was a Roman stratum. Apparently the Judeo-Christian synagogue, where the Church of Holy Zion was later built during the Byzantine Period, faced toward where they believed Jesus' resurrection had occurred," says Pixner, "and not toward the Temple Mount, according to Eucheririus."

Some of Pixper's research and subsequent published theories continue to stir debate among Jerusalem scholars.

WHERE WAS the real Via Dolorosa, for example? Whatever devotional or sentimental value Christians may derive from following the signs in the Old City from the Al Amariya School to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, no major archeologist or historian considers that the actual path Jesus took on his way to Roman execu-

"In fact," says Pixner, "I feel fairly certain that Pilate judged Jesus at the Hasmonean administrative palace, and apparently the Byzantine Via Dolorosa began there. That palace was available to the Roman procurators before King Herod Agrippa I, and probably stood near today's Yeshivat Porat Yosef in the Jewish Quarter." (See "Where was the original Via Dolorosa?", Christian News from Israel. No. 1, 1979)

Dormition Abbey. Tabgha, on the northern shore of the Sea of Gulilee, is Father Pixner's home for the other half of the year.

"Jesus as a man has become so real to me through my study and time around the lake." he remarks. "I am now convinced of the exactitude of Mark and Mathew, and John's Gospel is accurate topographically. I believe."

"Bethsaida-Julius can be preciselocated now just across the Jordan River and north of the first century delta line," asserts Pixner. "Josephus, the historian, gives us vivid details of Roman commander Sylla's defeat of the Jewish revolt here."

Bethsaida is mentioned as the hometown of three of the apostles (John 1:44) and as the place where Jesus healed a blind man (Mark 8:22-26). As an aide for pilgrims, Father Pixner has set up a memorial stone, with the permission of the authorities, at the northern edge of what may be the ruins of Bethsaida. The stone, near Jordan Park, is inscribed with symbols and a reference to Mark 8 in English and Hebrew. He has set up other stones with English and Hebrew inscriptions on the road from Tabgha to Capernaum and at Givat Hadar, near the lake and north of Kursi.

No serious excavations have vet been carried out at Bethsaida, but it is hoped that funding may be found to enable Pixner and a team to undertake work at this important site.

Christian unity has long been another major concern of Father Pixner. "It is so sad that our Christian communities in Jerusalem have been living side by side for so long with high walls - physical, linguistic, and spiritual separating us. It seemed to me that a grass-roots movement was needed. It was unlikely that the ecclesiastical hierarchy would initiate anything. We needed to become

"Our Ecumenical Circle of Friends was founded in 1972 and today includes priests, pastors, and lay people from most of the ancient oriental churches, plus Catholics, Protestants and Anglicans. We initiated the annual Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, which is held every January in various Jerusalem churches and in the Cenacle (Upper Room). Currently we are considering together the important World Council of Churches' documents on Baptism, Eucharist, and Ministry. I pray that these statements may help us here in Jerusalem to affirm our commonality of faith and work for new beginnings after the tragic hostilities and disputes of the past."

EXAMINING WHAT have do THE BANKS DID

By AARON SITTNER/Jerusalem Post Reporter

FOR YEARS bank shares were touted as a virtually risk-free investment vehicle. These shares earned for themselves the status of inflatioprotected currency and prime collateral for bank loans. Businessmen used the shares as a repository for idle cash. Non-profit organizations used them as a resting place for capital funds. And individuals purchased bank shares for their sav-

Then, when the Bank of Israel nulled the carpet out from under the banks and stopped financing their bizarre "price regulation" scheme on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange, all hell broke loose. The rest is history.

For Israeli legal experts, the bank share upheaval has offered new avenues for exploration. "There are several interesting law-related uspects here," Prof. Gabriela Shalev told The Jerusalem Post this week. Shalev, who teaches contract law at the Hebrew University, is director of the Harry Sacher Institute for Legislative Research and Comparative Law, and author of several books on contract law. "Last week," she said, "Justice Minister Moshe Nissim appointed two committees. They will examine not only the questions arising out of the conflict of interest that exists when a bank's investment adviser promotes the sale of his bank's shares. The investigators will also explore the entire concept of Israeli banks supporting the price of their shares in the face of natural market forces of supply and demand.

"Of course, these two questions should be explored very thoroughly. But Israelis should not let it stop there. In a democracy, a citizen may demand redress for a wrong done to him. Perhaps investors who have been hurt should consider direct legal action against those who encouraged them to buy bank shares."

As Attorney-General Yitzhak Zamir has already suggested, the sale by bank officers of their personally-owned bank shares in the period just preceding the Stock violated a section of the Securities Law of 1968. A 1981 amendment to this statute forbids insider trading based upon privileged information.

Shalev says: "In constitutional law, too, a major question arises: does the government have the authority to guarantee directly or indirectly - the value of shares traded on an open market?

"Then there is the Companies Law. In this country, a corporation is forbidden to buy its own shares if by doing so it 'waters down' its own capital. Did the banks get around the law by operating through subsidiaries set up to buy and sell their own shares?

INSISTING that she is not fomenting an anti-bank uprising, Shalev points out that 'there is such a thing as vicarious liability. That means that in many cases an organization is responsible for the actions of its employees in their activities connected with their work.

"Thus, even assuming that a bank's securities clerk acted in good faith when he advised customers that bank shares should be bought because a drop in their price would promptly be countered by the bank itself, the fact remains that he probably was speaking more as a bank employee than as a professional investment adviser. It seems to me, then, that the banks are culpable under the concept of vicarious liability for negligent misrepresentation on the part of their employees, the investment ad-viters. For lawyers who have been asked to sue banks on behalf of aggrieved customers, Prof. Shalev comes up with still another possibility: breach of contract. Unlike Rabbinical Law. Knesset-legislated statutes covering contracts do not require an agreement between two individuals to be in writing before a valid contractual situation is created.

Thus, the conversation between the bank's securities clerk and the Exchange debacle may have customer - in which the former of fered investment advice and the latter accepted it and signed an order slip - could, I believe, be viewed as a valid contract between the customer and his bank, After all the customer's decision to buy the bank shares was based on the clerk's counsel that they were a sure thing in the stock market since his employer, the bank, would always

the operative statute governing agreements between two parties does not state that a contract he in writing," she emphasized "Naturally, the banks could argue; in court that even if a contract had heen created in such a case, that part of the conversation between the bank employee and the customer — about bank shares being a sure thing — was not included in the contract since all investors. understand that purchasing of dinary shares, unlike fixed-income. securities (bonds and debentures). involves an element of risk.

"And the banks could con: ceivably raise another point in their defence - that of force majeure. Perhaps, they would say: Yes, it was a valid contract and, yes, we did break it. However, we should not be held liable because this frustration of contract was forced upon us by circumstances beyond our contra things such as the decision to half Bank of Israel assistance to the banks for share price support, and the ensuing panic selling of the shares and the flight to foreign

The question to the lady professor: If the banks are indeed found liable for negligence, breach of contract, etc., wouldn't they be forced into bankruptcy?

"That's a fair question and a good" argument," she says. "But, unfor: FRE PU tunately, it is irrelevant from the legal point of view. The fact that the banks would face terrible problems if found at fault certainly does not relieve them of their responsibility finance minister's new programme and the reaction of the other ministers to it.

It is clear to all that at the core of any meaningful economic programme aimed at redressing the major problem faced by the economy. there must be major cutting of government expenditures. If this is forthcoming, the public will be prepared to heave a collective sigh of relief, even if their pockets will be negatively affected. Should this eventually be realized, there is also a good case for those financial analysts who are foreseeing a stock market rebound in the not too distant future. All agree, however, that the public will only begin to act in a rational manner after a clearcut programme is tabled.

LEBANESE LEADERS last night narrowly avoided a breakdown of their National Reconciliation Conference in Geneva over the pact concluded between Israel and Lebanon last May, resolving to launch an international diplomatic campaign apparently designed to secure Israel's withdrawal independently of the agreement.

Syria has been calling for the abrogation of the accord ever since the conference got under way earlier this week, and this demand has been faithfully put forward by its proteges.

It has, in fact, been apparent from the start that the conference is less a bid by the war-weary Lebanese to put their house in order than a cleverly staged maneuver by Syria to stamp its writ on Lebanon's political future.

Formally, Syria is only an "observer" at the conference, along with Saudi Arabia. But it is patently in control. Its foreign minister, Abdul Halim Khaddam, made it clear on arrival early this week that he would be pressing Syria's demand for the abrogation of the accord - and that demand has so far dominated the discussions, even though a number of Damascus's own Lebanese proteges are somewhat ambivalent on the issue.

Thus Druse leader Walid Jumblatt has indicated that he was mindful of the large Druse population in Israel, and would like to see some form of face-saving formula emerging that would not lead to an open rift between the Israeli and Lebanese Druse communities.

Shi'a leader Nabi Berri, although he has openly called for the scrapping of the agreement, appears to be deeply concerned that such a move will cause Israel to dig in on the Awali, leaving a substantial proportion of his followers under indefinite Israeli rule in the south of the country.

Yet by the end of the week the conference has moved some considerable way towards meeting Syria's demand. Even if the final decision is not actually to abrogate the agreement but as has been proposed — to formally "freeze" or bypass it, this too will probably be viewed by Israel as a renunciation by Lebanon of its freely undertaken obligations towards this country, and therefore similarly unacceptable.

In any case, the conference has already by implication challenged the legitimacy of the agreement, when it decided to recognize Lebanon's "Arab character" and to affirm its commitment to the Arab League Charter — which explicitly precludes any unilateral accord between a signatory and Israel. Although it has been argued by the Christian side at the conference that the May 17 accord is no more a departure from the charter than was Syria's own 1974 separation of forces agreement with Israel, the two instruments are obviously not in the same class.

For Syria, all this must be rather gratifying. The statement by U.S. Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger in Jerusalem this week that his government stands by the Lebanon-Israel accord, and his blast at "forces opposed to peace," cannot have made a great impression in Damascus. Even the repeated warnings of Israeli leaders that any attempt to tamper with the pact will lead to the de facto partition of Lebanon do not seem to greatly disturb the Syrians.

A continued Israeli presence in southern Lebanon will, in fact, provide the Syrians with a ready excuse to remain in the Bekaa, an area which is, to them, at least as important strategically as southern Lebanon is to Israel. Had Israel decided to end its costly occupation of southern Lebanon and pull back unilaterally to the international frontier, that would have put Syria on the spot. For Syria would then have found it difficult to refuse Lebanon's request that it withdraw from the

POSTSCRIPTS

OUR MAN in Haifa reports that with winter just around the corner, he is worried that the undressed young ladies on cinema posters are likely to catch cold. That's because the city councillor who had seen to it that they are suitably covered won't be on the newly elected council.

Moshe Blitenthal, who represented the Aguda on the council for the past 14 years, has stood down in favour of Yeshayahu Wechselman, on the orders of the Rabbi of Gur.

Blitenthal had been waging a highly successful one-man morality campaign against the nudes appearing on the posters of two Haifa cinemas, Orion and Gal-Or, which specialize in sex films. Though the council rejected his demand for a by-law against the nudes, he managed very nicely by demanding that police take action under the criminal code, which forbids the public display of obscene material.

The two cinema-owners, who get the hand-painted posters with their films from Tel Aviv, had taken to covering the young ladies' more intimate areas with large strips of brown paper.

Now that Blitenthal is no longer on the council, however, it remains to be seen whether the owners will adopt the principle of what's saucy in Tel Aviv is saucy for Haifa

NOT KNOWING very much about political affairs or geography doesn't seem to be a disadvantage for politicians either in the U.S. or Israel. We remember, for example, when William Clark couldn't tell the Senate committee examining him as candidate for national security adviser, who was head of a certain country. Now Pessah Grupper, the new minister of agriculture, has shown similar ignorance. Asked on Israel TV's Now is the Time how he manages on his trips abroad without knowing a word of any foreign tongue, Grupper dismissed the question. As a veteran farmer, he said, he naturally struck up a friendship with his farmer-hosts. Anyway, in Puerto Rico, he continued, the language was "Portuguese," but his interpreters made sure his remarks were understood by the "primitive farmers living in huts" in that U.S. island territory.

IT'S NO secret that Israel needs dentists. The average age of the country's dentists is in the mid-50s, and their number is much smaller than that needed by the population.

The aliya department of the World Zionist Organization has therefore decided on a programme called "Roots" to bring Jewish den-tal students in the U.S. to Israel on pilot tours. The programme tries to encourage the dental students to settle in Israel immediately upon graduation, and to help them establish a practice here.

Last summer, 24 dental students arrived for a six-week seminar. A total of 25 have come on aliya within the last two years, since the programme was established, and an additional 60 are expected within the next two years.

The seminar participants meet dentists here and practise for two weeks in a clinic at Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem.

THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINAR. An Arab resident of the Jordan Valley was evidently confused over the recent talk of ditching the shekel and switching to another currency. He got on an Egged bus about 10 kilometres north of Jericho and tried to pay for his ride into town with a five-dinar note bearing the likeness of King Hus-

The driver, still loyal to the decrepit shekel, was about to throw him off, when an enterprising Egged inspector, who had gotten on a little way back, came to the rescue. After consulting with another passenger on the exchange rate (IS240 to the dinar), the inspector bought the Arab passenger's dinars so that he could pay his fare with Israeli

Bad advice from good friends in his advice from American friends who want us to start a shooting war with Syria. For many years we were urged to show more restraint; we are now in the novel position of being incited to greater militance.

The theme is particularly emphatic among the friendly political columnists. George Will considers that "the best (!) development would be for Israel to bomb Syrian artillery positions in the Bekaa Valley." Joseph Kraft hopes that Israel "will give (President) Assad another bloody nose," which in his view is a "prerequisite of balance in the Middle East." (In this scenario the best way to prevent war is to make war, and Israel's nose would presumably emerge organically and cosmetically intact.) The Wall Street Journal expresses a yearning for Mr. Arik Sharon. whose cabinet colleagues do not seem to share this eccentric nostalgia; 16 of them voted for and one against his removal from any responsibility for Israel's defence

At a higher level of authority and experience, Secretary of State George Shultz has regretted our absence from the Shouf mountains. There is nothing for Israelis to do in the Shouf except to kill and be killed, and the notion that Israel's military presence is an "incentive" for Syria to withdraw has been revealed as vain in the test of experience.

There was no intellectual excuse for harbouring such an improbable idea even before the experience was acquired. The spectacle of Israel inflicting fruitless and lethal agony upon itself does not weigh heavily on the Syrian leader. The only result of eliminating the old Soviet missiles in June 1982 has been to generate a mass of better Soviet missiles in the same sites in 1983. Thus a brilliant Israeli air victory has ended in an improved Syrian position in the regional balance of power — and an improved Soviet position in the global balance.

By ABBA EBAN

Henry Kissinger brilliantly negotiated the Israeli-Syrian Disengagement Agreement in 1974, and this remains the only U.S. success in the context of Syrian-Israeli relations. The underlying philosophy of that negotiation was simple and lucid; there are no conditions for an affirmative relationship between Syria and Israel in terms of peace, harmony, good neighbourly relations or regional solidarity.

The radical ideology and rhetoric the Syrian regime banishes all such hopes for the near future in which statesmanship must work. But Syria under Assad is capable of pragmatic arrangements that express a mutual interest in the avoidance of a shooting war, and once an agreement is concluded with Damascus, it is likely to be ef-

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

here with my wife and six children, I read with great relief your article about the departure of Raphael

This is because I am concerned with

Israel's aliya programme. I am concerned for the numerous Jews who also wish to return "home" to Israel, but who, instead of being encouraged by the Immigration and fective. Not a single shot has been fired and not a single terrorist infiltration has taken place across the disengagement line for nine years.

'It was Kissinger who patiently taught successive Israeli administrations to judge Syria by its actions and inactions, not by its rhetoric, and the warning against regarding Assad as a Soviet satellite resounds from the pages of Years of Upheaval (page 1033). It may well be true, as Kissinger fears, that a new negotiation would not now succeed unless there were a change in the balance of forces on the ground, but Israel is is no mood to take on the role of chief balance-changer.

ALL THE Americans whom I have quoted here are authentic and sincere friends of Israel. Since candour is the first dictate of friendship, it is our duty to tell our friends that Israel will absolutely decline to invest the lives of its sons in the expulsion of Syrian forces or in the fantasy of a stable, united Lebanon under a Christian Phalangist leadership which has manifestly failed to assert its authority or to become the focus of a Lebanese consensus.

We have about as much nostalgia for Beirut and the Shouf mountains as Americans have for Saigon. There is not a single predicament or peril facing Israel today that would not be aggravated sevenfold by a military strike against Syria.

To understand the conviction with which Israelis uphold this view. it is necessary to recall that the advance to Beirut with a resultant involvement in Lebanese politics was never the theme of an overall Israeli consensus. On June 11, 1982, the Labour Party adopted a resolution calling for a cease-fire along the 40 km. line where our forces then stood. At that stage no PLO weapon was in range of Israeli homes in Galilee or elsewhere. The call for abstention from any approach to Beirut and from air bombardments of that city was repeated in seven subsequent resolutions of the nation's largest parliamentary party, and echoed throughout all the avenues by which public opinion is

When it transpired that the entry into West Beirut and the introduction of the Phalangists into the refugee camps had not even been decided by the cabinet, the shock waves began to flow. They eventually made it inevitable for the three decision-makers to yield their places. In the meantime, more Israelis had been killed on Lebanese soil than the terrorists had been able to kill in all the years of Israel's statehood.

This result has to be compared with the previous year of cease-fire and deterrence in which no Israelis lost their lives in Galilee or anywhere else in northern Israel. When a nation changes the direction of its thought and policy under the influence of experience, this should not be described as a "flinch" or as "retrenchment," but as a return to the rationality which is a nation's surest and strongest shield. The alternative is to throw more and more assets onto the wheel in the hope of a jackpot result that would seem to recoup the existing loss. Need Americans be told where and when this has happened

THE LESSONS of this experience are not obscure. The first of them relates to the limitations inherent in military action. A western philosopher, Alfred North Whitehead, has written: "War can protect; it cannot create." Military success can prevent your adversary from destroying your life and home and freedom, and this is its deepest justification. But it cannot by itself create the harmonies and realities that impel warring nations to respect or acknowledge each other or to develop their relationships. External power is certainly not ade-on those who cannot win and keep it by their own consensual skills. Once its crucial preventive function is fulfilled military action must be succeeded and replaced by diplomacy and politics which imply persuasion, not coercion.

If Israeli and American rhetorical fulminations against Syria could solve any problem, most Israelia would be content. Since Syrian forces entered Lebanon in January 1976 with United States support for what was then the Syrian aim - the defence of the Christians against the PLO! - much water has flowed in the Awali and Jordan rivers. Following its 1974 success, American diplomacy during the Ford Administration enabled Israeli and Syrian forces to maintain an informal "accord" under which neither side would seek proximity with the other in Lebanon. Syria understands Israel's strength and a compact under which fire would be avoided is not inconceivable. Whatever happens Syria will always be a neighbour of Israel; this truth is not affected by the question whether the Syrian army is inside Syria or is weakened by being split between Lebanese and Syrian fronts. The problem of reconciling basic Syrian interests with a maximal degree of Lebanese sovereignty is intricate; but it cannot be solved by Israeli bombs, or even by Israeli presence.

WHETHER AMERICA can take up this challenge is for Americans to say. The American Marine contingent in the multinational force is large enough to be a target for terrorists and not large enough to be a credible focus of power of deterrence. Its aims have been ambitiously defined by President; Reagan. But can a force of 1,600 men really "curb Soviet expansion" or "root out international terrorism" or "prevent Syria from taking over Lebanon" or help to "insure Israel's security in the Middle East" or even make Lebanese majorities regard Amin Jemayel as: their authentic standard-bearer?

The American need is to bring the aims and capacities of its forces into some degree of harmony, and Israelis will respect any decision that is taken. My own impression, sustained by experience, is that American diplomacy may have more opportunities in Lebanon than are available to American power, in the immediate future, defiance of terrorism is an essential aim, but if the United States by recapturing the access to Damascus which it used in 1974 can become an active agent in an Israeli-Syrian-Lebanese conciliation, it may add new laurels to its previous achievements.

IN MEMORY OF PROFESSOR VELIKOVSKY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - Professor Emmanual Velikovsky, one of the world's most famous and controversial scientists. died four years ago next month. His association with the Hebrew University of Jerusalem is well known — his core of scientific jour-nals (which had as one of their editors, Professor Albert Einstein) became the nucleus of the Hebrew University Library,

As the years go by, more and more of Velikovsky's theories have become realities, as the space probe-programme vindicates what were thought of as impossible guesses when first published. His interdisciplinary researches, when examined critically without bias, have been found to be more and more in agreement with new findings. His very methodology is exemplary and followed in many research in-

To date, no just recognition of this great man's work or personality has been given by any academic institution in Israel. I have been trying for the past three years to get the agreement of the Hebrew University to make a gesture to this aim, to

With the election of Professor Don Patinkin as the new president of the Hebrew University, I would like to raise this issue and try to elicit support for the idea of perpetuating Professor Velikovsky's name with the university.

KOTLOWITZ'S DEPARTURE

Although all Israel preaches aliya and needs olim, it is a fact that the Immigration and Absorption Department of the Jewish Agency thwarts these activities through its bureaucracy whose policies, rules, and regulations are inconsistent with the Law of Return.

I hope that Mr. Kotlowitz's replacement will not be another political football who will continue to use this office for political patronage and carry on the present policies of the Immigration and Absorption Department of the Jewish Agency. It would be a great injustice, not only to the Diaspora but to Israel. PAUL K. WIENER

TRUE DEMOCRACY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Past Sir, — One must wonder why, in an article condemning mob violence ("Fighting back" by Yosef Goell - October 21), the author recommends that, in response to mere name-calling "...any policeman... should feel free to let loose his baton."

It is the anti-democratic nature of haredi violence which makes it particularly repugnant. In dealing with it, we would do well to uphold basic democratic principles ourselves including the right of all to speak and even to call names without fear of the baton.
